Senate Kills Inflationary Bonus; Bond Bill Delayed

Amendments Smothered as Upper House Nears Final Roll Call.

75 Favorable Votes Indicated by Polls

Ballot Due Tomorrow; Hastings Fights Alone Against Payment.

By Robert C. Albright.

Sidetracking by a 64 to 27 vote an inflationary bonus proposal, and loudly shouting down all other amendments, the Senate brought the coalition bond-payment bonus bill within reach of a vote late yesterday, then recessed over the week-end.

One lone amendment, by Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, to pay veterans only the present cash surrender value of their adjusted service certificates, remained in the way of a final ballot on the "united veterans" novel bond-payment plan.

Informal polls indicated the coalition bill will win tomorrow by an unprecedented chorus of about 75 "ayes," with only 15 to 20 Senators voting "no." This is far more than the two-thirds majority required to override a Presidential veto, if one is forthcoming.

Only One Opponent.

Throughout a day of hectic debate, with nerves frayed by neutrality differences coloring the discussion, the voice of only one Senator was raised in militant denunciation of the bond-payment bonus proposal substituted in the Senate Finance committee for the cash payment House bill.

It was that of Senator Daniel O. Hastings (Republican), of Delaware. He heckled Senate leaders on their past bonus record, disputed declarations that the "baby" bond bill represents an "improvement" over past measures, and shouted:

"It's the same old bonus bill, designed for the purpose of paying a debt 9¼ years before it is due, at a cost of $1,300,000,000 additional to the Government. You propose to vote this bill and vote it now, when there are 11,000,000 people out of jobs, and the public debt of the country is greater than ever before."

First Inflation Test.

With Senator Key Pittman, of Nevada, presiding, Senators made a last-minute spurt to pass the bill and get home to dinner, and nearly succeeded in doing so. A voice vote actually had been taken on substituting the Finance Committee plan for the House bill, when King demanded recognition for his own amendment, and the Senate granted unanimous consent to go back.

This session's first test of inflation strength came early in the afternoon on an amendment by Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, giving the Treasury discretionary authority to pay the bonus in new money issued against free gold and silver in the Treasury. An alternative plan was incorporated, under which the Government could print $2,237,000,000 in bonds, and place them in the 12 Federal Reserve Banks, which, in return for a nominal service charge, would issue checks to the veterans.

The Thomas amendment was crushed by a 64-to-27 record vote. Forty-four Democrats, 19 Republicans and 1 Progressive voted against it, with only 22 Democrats, 3 Republicans and 2 Farmer-Laborites voting "aye."

Other Amendments Defeated.

By a voice vote, the Senate later rode roughshod over another proposal by Thomas to appropriate outright $2,237,000,000 to pay off the bonus certificates.

Two other amendments were hopelessly defeated by voice ballots. They were:

By Senator Carl Hayden (Democrat), Arizona—To make money owed the Government by the veterans, such as debts to the Home Owners Loan Corporation and the Farm Credit Administration, prior liens against adjusted service certificates, before payment of the bonus.

By Senator Tom Connally (Democrat), Texas—To extend bonus benefits to 2,400 World War "provisional" second lieutenants, whom Comptroller General McCarl has ruled are not eligible for the bonus under law.

Relief Status Assured.

Senator Lewis Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington, offered an amendment to safeguard against removal of veterans from work relief rolls because of bonus payment. He withdrew this proposal when Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, "assured" him the WPA has no intention of releasing veterans because of bonus benefits.

Senator King intends to speak for 30 minutes tomorrow on his amendment to pay off the bonus certificates on a basis only of present value, but leaders said it stands no chance of approval.

Senator King had the floor when the Senate recessed. Had he been allowed to proceed, another hour would have seen the bill on its way back to the House, on the last lap of its journey to the White House.

Delayed action by the Senate means the House will get the bill some time tomorrow. At that time the lower chamber must decide whether it will accept the Senate's bond-payment substitute, or demand a conference on its own cash bill.

A scattering of khaki in the packed Senate galleries contrasted with the thousands of bonus

'Ain't She Cute?' Police Name Baby Abandoned on Bladensburg Rd.

She was a sensation. They didn't know her name or where she came from. But when she rolled those big, blue eyes and tried to smile, several big men in the room made awkward motions in her direction and looked at each other with sheepish glances.

Those big men even made funny noises in their throats—anything to attract the young lady's attention. For a few minutes they forgot they were policemen and even laughed. And the young lady—they guessed her age at 10 days—just made funny noises right back at them and continued to roll those eyes.

Already (considering her age) she had had quite a taste of night life. She rode in a police car, ignored the stares of nearly a dozen curious reporters, photographers and bystanders and even forgot she had been abandoned in the women's restroom of a gasoline station at Bladensburg road and Channing street northwest.

Wrapped in Blankets.

And that was where she was found last night when her muffled cries attracted the attention of John Coolick, station manager. Wrapped carefully in blankets, she was lying on the cement floor beneath a wash basin. Beside her was a bottle of milk.

At the Twelfth Precinct police station, she soon became the center of attraction. She allowed herself to be placed in the custody of Policeman T. M. Lewis (a father, and he showed it).

Lewis took the milk bottle and heated the contents over a gas heater in the police station garage. His efforts were greatly appreciated by the little visitor and she stopped rolling her eyes long enough to take a few sips.

Attracted by Cries.

Coolick reported he found the baby shortly before 10 p. m. Neither he nor other employes of the filling station saw anyone enter the rest room.

"The tiny youngster's cries were the first we knew that anyone was in there," said Coolick.

"Gee, ain't she cute?" said a big bluecoat.

And so they named her "Miss Ain't She Cute."

Apparently abandoned with careful plans, the tiny youngster was clothed in expensive woolen booties, sweater and cap. There were no marks of identification or notes found in the blankets or around the rest room.

She was taken to the Police Women's Bureau and, unless someone claims her, she will be taken to Children's Hospital, police said.

'Boondoggling' Is Good Word, Says President

Roosevelt on Visit to N. Y., Makes Plea for Birthday Ball.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.
A Staff Correspondent.

New York, Jan. 18.—President Roosevelt arrived at his home here late today in a cold, penetrating drizzle of rain, after saying a good word for "boondoggling" at Newark, N. J., where he stopped en route from Washington for two hours to attend a meeting of Federal Relief and Emergency leaders.

The Newark meeting, conducted by the National Emergency Council under the direction of the New Jersey director, Charles Edison, brought together the heads of all the Federal agencies operating in that State, each to give to the others a report on his activities.

Mr. Roosevelt, in what amounted to a "pep" speech to the group which jammed the Robert Treat Hotel ballroom, insisted that the projects being undertaken with New Deal funds not only fulfilled a current necessity growing out of human difficulties, but also would result in permanent usefulness.

Grand Word, He Says.

"There is a grand word going around—'boondoggling,'" the President asserted. "It is a pretty good word. If we can boondoggle ourselves out of this depression, that word is going to be enshrined in the hearts of the American people for many years to come."

Taking cognizance of criticism of the nature of some projects, the President denied the Federal projects originate in Washington. In 99 out of 100 cases the projects arise in the first instance with the local authorities, he said, asserting that in addition to the overwhelming majority of such projects being useful "the liberties of self-government still exist." He said he had not heard the Mayor of Newark or any other city say:

"Don't do that, we don't want you to do that, your projects are useless."

Mayors Retain Powers.

"Now they are co-operating with the Federal Government and no mayor in this country has been shorn of any of the responsibilities of his office," the President asserted amid laughter and cheers, adding: "In other words, as we all know, we are still carrying out the principles of home rule."

The President received a warm reception from the people of Newark, as distinct from the meeting of Federal job holders which he addressed. Despite rain and sleet, thousands of persons lined the six blocks between the station and the hotel to wave at the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, as they rode by in a closed automobile.

Far smaller crowds, comparatively, greeted the President in

Mother Abandons 3 Children; Girl, 13, Flees 'With Admirer'

Police last night sent lookouts for a mother who had abandoned three children, and for a 13-year-old girl who had fled from home "with an admirer."

The mother was Mrs. Lucille Breen, 34-year-old Civil Service Commission employe. She left only laconic notes to explain her desertion of her three children when she vanished from her home, 816½ Seventh street southwest, yesterday.

When she departed she left a resignation blank and a note for her sister, Mrs. Mary Eva Oldfather, of 212 Seventeenth place northwest.

"I'm going away," wrote Mrs. Breen to her sister. "I'm going away and start life all over again."

Mrs. Breen addressed a note to her two oldest children—Mary, 12, and James, 10—who live with Mrs. Oldfather. She cautioned them to obey their aunt and be good to her.

The third child, Betty Ann, 3, is an inmate of the Swartzell Methodist Home for Children.

Last night the youngsters missed their mother, who is estranged from their father.

After she had failed to return they waited anxiously—Mary and James watching the approach to Mrs. Oldfather's home.

Leaving a note saying, according to police, that she was "leaving with an admirer," 13-year-old Gertrude Anna Barry disappeared from her home, 6617 Barnaby street, Chevy Chase, D. C., yesterday morning.

Her disappearance was reported to the Woman's Bureau last night by the girl's aunt, Miss Eleanore Dankmeyer, with whom she has been living.

According to her aunt, she carried with her two overnight bags

Clark Attacks Bryan, Calls Him Betrayer

Flays Wilson's Late War-Time Aid in Senate Appeal for Funds.

Great Commoner Broke Faith With Father in 1912, He Says.

By Felix Bruner.

Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), Missouri, took up the fight in the Senate yesterday for the existence of the Senate Munitions Committee. In doing so he hurled a charge of "betrayer" at the memory of almost the only war-time official of the United States whose record has not already been "smeared" by the committee—William Jennings Bryan, Secretary of State, in the early part of the Wilson Administration.

Senator Clark said he had no animosity toward Woodrow Wilson, who had already been charged by Senator Nye (Republican), North Dakota, chairman of the committee, with "falsifying," but he added that Bryan had betrayed his father, the late Champ Clarke. The "betrayal" took place, Clark told the Senate, at the Baltimore convention in 1912, when the Senator's father and Wilson were candidates for the Democratic nomination for President.

An attempt by Senator Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, to bring an immediate vote on a proposed appropriation for completing the work of the Munitions Committee was blocked by Nye, who said he did not know yet the amount of the new appropriation for which he would ask. The committee already has spent virtually all of its $125,000 appropriation from the Senate, plus $58,000 of WPA funds, of which $23,000 was contributed by the city and State of New York.

Nye Faces Rebuff.

The temper of the Senate was such that as appeared extremely doubtful whether Nye would be able to obtain money to continue his investigation. He said he would ask for $7,000 or $9,000 and that examination of witnesses could be completed in 15 days. The committee will meet next Wednesday to determine its future steps. J. P. Morgan and his partners in J. P. Morgan & Co. still are under notice to reappear before the committee Thursday.

Not only is the future of the Munitions Committee in doubt, but it was becoming increasingly evident that the flare-up over the Nye investigation will have a considerable influence on the course of neutrality legislation, at least in the Senate. Anger on the part of many Senators against the tactics of the committee is expected to influence the debate on neutrality.

Meanwhile, Secretary of State Hull announced that he had turned over to the Department of Justice for "appropriate action" the names of between 20 and 30 munitions makers who had failed to register under the present neutrality law. The names were not made public.

Clark Replies to Glass.

Clark's speech was in answer to the speech in the Senate Friday by Senator Carter Glass (Democrat), Virginia, in which Glass defended the memory of Wilson against Nye's attacks, calling the Nye charges "cowardly."

The Missouri Senator's reference to the Baltimore convention was in reply to what he said were insinuations that he had attacked Wilson because of events in that convention.

"There was never even the slightest animosity between my father and President Wilson, or between the memory of President Wilson and any member of my father's family," he said. "My father was a candidate at the Baltimore convention, as he had a right to be, and he received a majority of nine ballots.

"He was subsequently defeated by President Wilson, who also was

King Weaker, Stroke Feared; Crisis Expected in 48 Hours

Throngs crowded Buckingham Palace's gates yesterday to read the bulletins of the increasing illness of their monarch. The 70-year-old ruler was stricken suddenly at Sandringham. Above is a retouched radiophoto.

Bronchial Illness Grows; Three Doctors Held Ready for Call.

Rural Neighbors Wait News at Gate

Emergency Council of State Is Forecast as Fears Increase.

By the Associated Press.

Sandringham, England (Sunday), January 19.—King George V, suffering from a cardiac weakness and a bronchial ailment, was sleeping peacefully at an early hour this morning.

The last official bulletin issued last night said there had been no change in his condition since an early evening announcement, which stated that "the cardiac weakness and embarrassment of circulation has slightly increased and gives cause anxiety."

A statement that there would be no further bulletins during the night, barring a sudden change for the worse, served somewhat to allay apprehension over the condition of the 70-year-old monarch, but there was great anxiety throughout his far-flung empire and the whole world.

Family Gathers.

As members of the King's family gathered at Sandringham House, the royal residence, a high source said a crisis might be expected within about 48 hours.

Bronchial catarrh, it was said, has affected the sovereign's lungs and nose, causing hoarseness, feverishness and sore throat. Cardiac weakness has been caused, it was stated, by a pulmonary inflamation which affected the lungs and the heart, giving rise to fears of a heart attack.

Special supplies of oxygen were being held at a hospital at nearby Kingslynn, available for swift transportation to Sandringham House in case of an emergency.

A member of the staff of the hospital said the preparations were made at the request of persons at the King's residence.

See Quiet at Palace.

All appeared quiet at the Sandringham estate at 1:30 a. m. The great jubilee gates were wide open, but only doctors and servants were allowed to enter.

The servants' quarters were ablaze with light, and all were on duty, a fact which was not explained, but was taken to indicate the extreme anxiety of officials for the safety of the King.

The London Sunday Dispatch declared a council of state will be appointed for the duration of the King's illness, as was done when he was believed in danger in 1928.

The announcement of no change in his majesty's condition was taken as an indication he had failed to show any signs of rallying.

Country Folk Saddened.

When dusk fell across the Norfolk countryside, a group of anxious-eyed countryfolk, waiting at the palace gates, read with sinking hearts a late bulletin which told of a grave turn in the condition of their beloved neighbor, "His Majesty, The Squire."

The bulletin said:

"His Majesty, the King, had some hours of restful sleep.

"The cardiac weakness and embarrassment of circulation has slightly increased and give cause for anxiety."

"Embarrassment of circulation" was interpreted to mean the heart action was growing weaker.

Three Doctors on Call.

Three physicians remained within call through the night.

One of England's greatest heart specialists, Sir Maurice A. Cassidy, was called to Sandringham yesterday from London. Oxygen was administered to the King Friday night, but it was explained that this is a modern treatment for a catarrhal condition.

Men and women outside the royal residence knelt on a thick mantle of snow to murmur prayers for the

New Farm Bill To Be Offered In Senate Soon

Bankhead to Act; Wallace Sets Feb. 15 Deadline for AAA Substitute.

As Secretary of Agriculture Wallace yesterday set February 15 as the deadline for new farm legislation to become effective if it would aid in handling 1936 crops, Senator Bankhead (Democrat), of Alabama, announced that he would introduce legislation at once.

His bill, he said, would "accomplish in a large measure the same results that have been secured under the AAA." It would call for an appropriation of $350,000,000 to finance "drafts to farmers based on their compliance with plans promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture." These, in application, would include "diversification and rotation of crops, crop adjustments and soil building," he said. He added that the proposed legislation "contains my interpretation of the agreement reached at the White House conference this week, of which I was a member," according to the Associated Press.

In the Agricultural Adjustment Administration offices lights that had burned nightly since the Supreme Court rang the gong on the AAA were on yesterday in the gloomy afternoon as legal and soil conservation experts pooled their knowledge in preparing the background for Congressional action next week.

On Capitol Hill Senate leaders discussed the possibilities of hooking legislation to the independent offices appropriation bill which passed the House the day before.

In his walnut-paneled office, Secretary Wallace, giving his first press conference since the invalidation of the AAA, stressed that preparation of legislation was a "Congressional function," but that:

"The important thing is to expand the definition of the soil conservation act (of 1935) to include specifically soil conservation and

Rich, Poor Kneel at Palace Gate Praying for Recovery of King

Fashionably Garbed Men and Women, Soldiers, Hackmen and Servants Bow Together at Buckingham, United by Fear for Monarch.

By the Associated Press.

London, Jan. 18.—On the cold stones beside the gates of Buckingham Palace men and women in evening dress, soldiers, taxi drivers and housemaids knelt in prayer tonight for the recovery of King George.

Five women, fashionably gowned, stepped out of a large limousine and, after reading the latest bulletin, joined the kneeling groups with their heads bowed against the iron railings.

The first bulletins since the King's near-fatal illness seven years ago appeared on the gates of the palace, sharply emphasizing the serious condition of the stricken sovereign.

Little groups stood waiting with hopes that a turn for the better would be reported, but a general feeling persisted that the 70-year-old monarch was in more serious danger even than in 1928.

The nation was stunned by the suddeness of the King's illness, for a few days ago he was reported in excellent spirits, riding his favorite pony around his Norfolk estate, like the regular country squire he prefers to be considered when he is at Sandringham.

Newsboys crying extras in the streets told millions of Londoners of the illness of their sovereign. Men and women running for buses in Piccadilly and Charing Cross stopped short ad snatched copies of the late editions.

They stood in the middle of the pavements and read the dark tidings.

A pall overcast the usual Saturday night gayety of smart West End cafes and restaurants. Newspaper officers were deluged with telephone inquiries.

The alarming word "anxiety," twice used in the afternoon bulletins from Sandringham, shocked Britons, who realize the language of court physicians is always most conservative.

Significantly, Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin remained at 10 Downing street instead of spending the week-end at his Chequers estate.

The Duke of Gloucester was the only one of the King's sons remaining in London. He was at Buckingham Palace suffering from a sore throat and was reported to be "about the same."

Hoffman Opens Kidnap Study; Clews Lacking

Governor Reportedly Has No Positive Leads in the Lindbergh Case.

By the United Press.

Trenton, N. J., Jan. 18.—Gov. Harold G. Hoffman is starting his huge-scale campaign to solve the Lindbergh case, it was learned tonight, without a single definite new clew.

A source high in the councils of the Governor declared that, as yet, the purported new evidence in the kidnaping and murder of Charles A. Lindberg, jr., had produced not one positive lead.

But the stocky, black-haired Hoffman, assailed by his political foes and facing possible impeachment proceedings for reprieving Bruno Richard Hauptmann, is staking everything on a firm belief—supported by the opinions of many other persons and contradicted by still others—that the conviction of the German carpenter did not clear up the mystery of the century's most sensational crime.

The Governor hopes for a quick break. He may get it tomorrow. Or he may get it next week—or never.

When and if it does come in the face of expert opinion that further solution of the case is a 10,000-to-1 shot, Hoffman is going to be waiting and ready to make the most of it. He will not miss any chances. Already his political position is so precarious that he must seize every straw, in the opinion of those who will attempt to lead the fight against him.

The Governor, whether or not there are developments in the case, has ammunition that will permit him to make out a good case for the Hauptmann reprieve. It was learned that, while the several hundred documents he has received offered no positive clew, some offered what the Governor consid-

Broker Fined $400,000 For Illegal Dealings

Naples, Italy, Jan. 18 (AP).—The government fined an exchange broker, Francesco Guadisio, 5,000,000 lire (about $400,000) tonight for illicit operations.

Thirty-one other members of an alleged exchange ring were fined between 500 and 150,000 lire each. Thirteen exchnage offices were closed. Two men charged as ringleaders will be sent to prison islands.

Scotland Yard Expert Amazed By Rackets Found in America

Inspector Bishop, Here to Testify in Swindle, Unable to Discuss Kidnaping; Gang Crimes Unknown to England.

By the Associated Press.

Inspector Arthur Bishop of Scotland Yard, told reporters yesterday that America's kidnapings, rackets, swindles and gang crimes "couldn't happen in England."

He avoided talk of the Lindbergh case, but defended the death penalty for violent crimes.

"Men show they have no right to live when they do certain things," the inspector declared.

Dressed in gray morning coat and black trousers, the man from the famous "C. I. D." met reporters in the office of Chief Postoffice Inspector Kildroy P. Aldrich. Bishop came to America to testify in the "Drake estate swindle" case in Chicago.

The first question drew a quick reply.

"I can't tell you that," he smiled. "There is no kidnaping in England."

"Pursuance" is the secret of the "Yard's" success, he said:

"That and the co-operation of the public. But I think that persistence is the real answer. We don't leave a case until we've got the fellow who did it."

"In England, when a man commits a crime, he knows he's in for it. In England, too, there's none of this bludgeoning a fellow."

A reporter asked if he meant the "third degree."

"Yes," he replied. "When we go out on a case, we enter places as gentlemen, and we get the information we want.

"England hasn't really any big crime problems.

"Why? Because they're more or less dealt with, I suppose. We don't have any serious criminal gangs. Oh, there was a bunch once who were doing some things with razors, but we cleaned them up."

"In America, you leave your criminals stewing in their juices for a year or two. In England, crime is unequivocally dealt with. When we have solved a crime, we move quickly in the courts."

The business "racketeers," who take millions every year out of American big cities, "just couldn't exist in England."

The "Drake estate swindle" itself "amazed" the man from the "Yard." Oscar Hartzell and his associates were charged with selling thousands of midwesterners "shares" in the estate of Sir Francis Drake, which was supposed to return great wealth when the estate was "admitted."

"With all due respect to some of your American farmers," he said, "I can't imagine people being taken in by such a scheme. We never could have such a case in England."

Lost Boy, 4, Found Frozen On Arizona Mountain Ledge

By the Associated Press.

Bisbee, Ariz., Jan. 18.—A small boot, protruding from under a rocky ledge, led to the finding late today of 4-year-old Roy Rogers' frozen body—the grim end of a four-day hunt, in which 300 ground searchers and six airplanes joined.

Two miles from the ranch of his uncle, Lawrence McDonald, after wandering away Wednesday, Roy sought the shelter of the ledge in the Guadelupe Mountains, first removing one boot.

But the ledge did not prevent the freezing winds from chilling his thinly clad body.

Today a booted leg caught the eye of Herschel Long, State highway department truck driver.

Fears the boy had fallen into the hands of renegade Apache Indians from below the Mexican border had spurred a search of every recess of the rugged mountain sector.

"The boy probably died the first night he was lost," said Sheriff I. V. Pruitt, who led the searching parties.

"It was bitter cold in the mountains and I do not believe he could have survived the exposure. A biting wind whipped over the country that night."

The child's body was brought out of the mountains by horseback to the McDonald ranch, to his grief-stricken parents.

"The parents didn't expect to find the boy alive," the sheriff said.

"He had been gone too long for any hopes to be held."

The sheriff called in the airplanes, soldiers, Indian trackers and citizens when Long notified him the body had been found.

Three American Army planes piloted by men who volunteered their services, were sent here from March Field, Calif.

Midwest Storm Spreads Death; Snow Due Here

Cold Snap Forecast for City as Blizzard Sweeps On the East.

A blizzard raged across the Mississippi Valley and the Great Lakes yesterday, bringing death, stalling transportation in the air, on the highways and railroads, and leaving in its wake a zero-weather wave from the Northwest.

With less snow forecast for the week, the storm last night was expected to spend itself over the Atlantic, leaving temperatures below normal.

As Washingtonians were told by the Weather Bureau to expect rain changing to snow with much colder weather today, a fresh blanket covered the Middle West, as deep as a foot and a half in many places.

First tragedy of the blizzard, press dispatches reported, occurred at Kenosha, Wis., where high wind and waves lashed to pieces a fishing tug, the Cheerio, against ice piled high on the shores of Lake Michigan. The crew of four men was believed to have drowned. The wreckage was found near the shore.

Traffic acidents raised the death toll in the path of the storm. In Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin and northern Indiana, roads were impassable in many places.

Roads were littered by scores of abandoned automobiles in these States. Particularly hard hit, the United Press reported, was Iowa, where snow was reported the heaviest in a decade in the northwest part of the State.

Trains arriving in Chicago from the North and Northwest were hours late—the crack Overland Limited of the Chicago & Northwestern being long delayed by the snowfall. As the storm swept toward the seaboard, trains from the East were held up.

The skies cleared while the blizzard raged eastward and mail and passenger planes took off for the West from Chicago, but planes for the East were grounded because snow made flying hazardous over the Alleghanies.

At Medfield, Mass., the Associated Press reported, scores of searchers were trailing 3-year-old Dale Tibbitts through a fast falling snow. He wandered away from home Wednesday.

A tornado struck near Fort Payne, Ala., causing at least four deaths and heavy property damage.

In Washington the start of the sportsman pilots' annual Washington-to-Miami flight was postponed until today because of frigid weather conditions, ranging from the North Carolina line to Jacksonville, Fla. The fliers probably will take off from College Park today, unless weather conditions prevent it.

Lowest temperatures reported by the Associated Press last night were 40 below at Warroad, Minn., 35 below at Crookston, Minn., and 31 below at Grand Forks.

Possible snow was forecast for the District today. The temperature will drop, the Weather Bureau said.

Yesterday's high was 43 at 5 p. m., and the lowest was 36 at 7 a. m.

King Weaker

recovery of the stricken monarch, the small, bearded man with deep-set, tired eyes, whose gentle reign of more than a quarter of a century has captured the devotion of his 450,000,000 subjects.

As lights of residence twinkled on, the slender figure of the Prince of Wales, the King's only bachelor son and next in line of succession to the throne, was seen passing nervously back and forth in front of an upper window. He arrived from London Friday.

Princess Royal Arrives.

The Princess Royal, the Countess of Harewood, the King's only daughter and one of his favorite companions, arrived at Sandringham House late Friday and went immediately to her mother, Queen Mary. The two had a long talk.

The departure of the King's two little granddaughters, the Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose, for London, emphasized the concern felt.

They had been informed that their grandfather is "not feeling very well" and must have quiet and rest. They were markedly subdued when they boarded a train, with Elizabeth hugging her pet Welsh terrier, "Yorky," close in her arms.

Special prayers will be offered at the parish church today and there will be similar prayers throughout the nation.

Because of the "disquieting" nature of King George's illness, Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin decided to remain in London for the week-end.

Latest bulletins from the bedside gave rise to the belief an emergency council of state will be called shortly.

This is customary when the King's life is believed in danger and was done in 1928, when George was seriously ill. A council was summoned comprising Queen Mary, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of York, Lord Chancellor Hailsham and Prime Minister Baldwin.

They were appointed at a meeting of the privy council, held in an audience chamber next to the King's bedroom. The bedroom door was open and the King was fully cognizant of the proceedings.

Messages from throughout the world poured in upon Sandringham. Adolf Hitler sent his "sincerest wishes for a full recovery."

The Archbishop of Canterbury, head of the Church of England, in speaking of the illness in Canterbury Cathedral, said:

"It would be foolish to deny that there are grounds for anxiety, but there are also good grounds of hope in the King's proved powers of recovery and the knowledge, experience and skill of his doctors."

4 Specialists in Charge.

Four of Britain's most eminent physicians are attending the King, Lord Dawson of Penn, physician in ordinary; Sir Frederick Stanley Hewett, surgeon apothecary; Sir Frederic J. Willans, surgeon apothecary to the household at Sandringham, and Sir Maurice Cassidy, the heart specialist.

The first disclosure that the King was ill was made Friday, when it was said he was confined to his room with a slight cold. A bulletin Friday night, however, told of the cardiac trouble.

This little village of 100, about 100 miles northeast of London, immediately became the center of an empire's anxiety.

King George and Queen Mary came here December 12 for the Christmas holidays, but the household was saddened by mourning for Princess Victoria, younger sister of the King and one of his favorites, who died December 3 at the age of 67.

The monarch's last active participation in affairs of state was when he attended a privy council here at which Anthony Eden received the seal of foreign secretary. Two days later he delivered his customary message in a world-wide broadcast. He had been closely following the Italo-Ethiopian situation.

A village woman, who saw him riding only Wednesday, said he "looked just as he always does.

"I curtsied to him and the King wished me good-day in his usual kindly fashion. We were all shocked when we learned how ill he is."

The devotion and homage of the empire was paid the ruler last year when his silver jubilee was observed.

Within the last 15 months two of the King's sons were married, the Duke of Kent and the Duke of Gloucester. A son born recently to the Duke and Duchess of Kent (she was the former Princess Marina of Greece) is seventh in line of succession to the throne.

King George, as the only surviving son of Edward VII, succeeded to the throne May 6, 1910.

Hotel Guests Turned Out.

Guests in the tiny village of Sandringham's only hotel had to give up their rooms last night and moved to the nearest town, King's Lynn, eight miles distant, to make room for the increasing staff of medical aids and advisers. Special officers were on duty at the palace gates.

Queen Mary, despite her own deep troubles, found time to dispatch this telegram to Mrs. Rudyard Kipling, widow of the writer who died early yesterday.

"The King and I were grieved to hear of the death this morning of Mr. Kipling. We shall mourn him not only as a great national poet but as a personal friend of many years. Please accept our heartfelt sympathy. (Signed) MARY R.

The first bulletin issued yesterday merely said: "The anxiety expressed in the bulletin of last night persists."

At George's bedside is the faithful Nurse Black, who was with him during his serious illness of 1928 and 1929.

During that time the King was near death but he finally recuperated. Two operations were performed to draw fluid from his chest.

Newspapers said His Majesty's health had been undermined by the strain of the jubilee celebration and grief over the death of his sister.

The Duke of Gloucester is now ill in Buckingham Palace with a sore throat, while the Duchess of York is recovering from influenzal pneumonia.

full of clothes, a stuffed rabbit but no money.

"She had been reading too many detective stories," Miss Dankmeyer explained, saying she discounted the existence of an "admirer."

The note, written in a childish scrawl on a piece of white paper, read, police said, as follows:

"I am leaving with an admirer. There is no use following me. I have borrowed your suit case and will pay you for it later. Thanks very much for your past care. Gertrude."

The girl's mother, Miss Dankmeyer said, was an invalid in a New York hospital. Her father is employed in New York.

Gertrude is 5 feet 1 inch high, weighs 110 pounds, has gray eyes and medium brown long bobbed hair. At the time of her disappearance she was wearing a brown hat, shoes and coat.

Aileen Logue, 15, has been missing from her home, 1514½ Rosedale street northeast, for nearly a week, police were told last night.

She disappeared from Lenox Vocational School. Request for a search was made by her fiance, Carl Busher, who lives on Lincoln road northeast.

Joseph Thomas, 15, was expelled Friday from Berwyn School for smoking, according to his father. That night he left home and headed for Washington. He was without money as far as it was known. He has not been heard from since.

The youth's father, John Thomas, of near Berwyn, Md., asked police last night to search for the boy.

Tornadoes Hit Alabama; 4 Die, Several Injured

Hedge-Hopping Windstorm Destroys Town; Property Damage Is Heavy.

By the Associated Press.

Fort Payne, Ala., Jan. 18.—A tornado dipped at three points on the populous slope of Sand Mountain near here today, killing four persons, injuring several others and inflicting extensive property loss.

The Sand Mountain tornado preceded by several hours the one striking in east central Alabama, injuring five persons.

The dead:

Claude Portwood, 36, a farmer, near Fyffe.

Mrs. Claude Portwood, 32, his wife.

Randolph Rowell, 87, of Morgan's Cross Roads.

Janet Rowell, 87, of Morgan's Cross Roads.

The injured:

Adolph Rowell, 40, of Morgan's Cross Roads, condition critical from spinal injury.

J. L. Rowell, 4, son of Adolph condition serious from fractured skull.

Miss Willie Dawson, 30, of Rainsville, seriously injured.

Doris Crawford, 1, near Columbiana, condition serious.

Four others, near Columbiana, slightly hurt.

The tornado that swept Sand Mountain "hedge-hopped" over a distance of about 10 miles. The twister struck the Portwood home first, demolishing it and pinning the couple in the debris, then lifted to dip again 4 miles further on at the Rowell home. Five miles away it dipped again to destroy all but one residence in the village of Rainsville.

J. M. Smith, undertaker, who went to the scene, said that the path of the storm was about 100 yards wide, "maybe less," and that it swept along the ground only for short distances at each point.

A check of the area was delayed by washed-out roads due to the torrential rains that accompanied the tornado.

The tornadoes in east central Alabama hit a widely varying points, but heavy rain fell over a large area and high winds were reported from several points contiguous to both storm areas.

The home of R. L. Crawford, 4 miles from Columbiana, was demolished. It was in the house that his small daughter, Doris, was badly hurt. Mrs. Crawford, their son, Thomas, and a Negro maid, were slightly hurt.

Florida Gets Storm Warning.

Jacksonville, Fla., Jan. 18 (AP).—The Weather Bureau late today ordered southeast storm warnings displayed from Carrabelle, Fla., on the northwest Gulf coast, southward to Palmetto, on the west coast.

Caution was advised for small craft, especially in the northeast Gulf of Mexico. Storm warnings also are flying westward of Carrabelle to the Texas coast.

2 Bandits, Guard Killed.

Madrid, Jan. 18 (AP).—Two bandits and a lieutenant of the civil guard were killed today in an exchange of shots at Jerez de la Fronter between guards and a group of men believed responsible for a holdup in a tavern there yesterday in which two were killed.

Federal Judges Void Frazier-Lemke Clause

Lincoln, Neb., Jan. 18 (AP).—Federal District Judge T. C. Munger, of Lincoln, and J. A. Donohoe, of Omaha, today declared unconstitutional the part of the second Frazier-Lemke act which attempts to halt mortgage foreclosures on farm property.

The judges ruled invalid section 8 of the new law, which was passed after the United States Supreme Court invalidated the first law. They held the section deprived mortgagees of property without due process of law.

The section would have permitted farm debtors to file amended petitions for composition of debts. The effect of the ruling, attorneys explained, will be to ban filing of bankruptcy petitions in instances where a mortgage foreclosure action is pending.

Paris Anxiously Awaits Reports on King George

Paris, Jan. 18 (AP).—Republican Paris anxiously scanned newspaper extras tonight for the latest reports on King George V.

President Albert Lebrun, as soon as he heard of the King's illness, asked the Quai d'Orsay to instruct Charles Corbin, French Ambassador to London, to keep him informed of the King's condidtion.

King George last visited Paris in 1925 and laid a wreath on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. Many remember when he came to France during the war to cheer Britain's soldiers at the front.

'Human Angles' Under Inquiry In Plane Crash

American Air Line Heads Act to Isolate Passengers From Pilots.

By the Associated Press.

Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 18.—As Federal investigators studied the "human element" angle today in the crash of the transcontinental plane "Southerner" in Arkansas, American Air Line pilots were ordered to keep doors between their compartment and passenger cabins locked during flight.

Hugh Smith, the air lines' Southern division superintendent who issued the instructions, declined to comment on published reports that this action was taken because of the "growing belief that man, not machine" was responsible for the accident Tuesday night in which 17 persons, all aboard the plane, died.

In the past, passengers were said to have been permitted occasionally to enter pilots' quarters to observe operation of planes.

Maj. R. W. Schroeder, United States Air Lines inspector, dismissed as "the usual stock one," a rumor that a passenger may have had narcotics aboard the ill-fated air liner.

He described as a "broad statement" the published reports concerning the possible cause of the accident.

"I naturally have no comment to make on the case, as I am not permitted to discuss my opinions," Maj. Schroeder said. He added that records of passengers and crew members were being investigated by the Department of Justice "as is usual in the investigation of every accident of this kind."

In order to develop all possible clews, he said air line officials planned to drain land at the place where the huge liner drove into the swamp near Goodwin, Ark. He said a minute search also would be made for the pistols carried by pilots and co-pilots and which have not yet been found.

Ethiopians Flee As Italy's Army Takes New Area

Southern Forces Advance 125 Miles, Communique From Rome States.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Jan. 18.—Italy's southern army was reported driving ever deeper into Ethiopia today, with Emperor Haile Selassie's warrior-defenders fleeing before it.

An official communique said 5,000 Ethiopians have been killed. Fascist newspapers estimated 3,000 prisoners have been taken captive in what was described as one of the most important battles of the nearly five-month old war.

The southern army has advanced 200 kilometers (about 125 miles) into the barren country, it was claimed in a communique which said:

"The victory of Gen. Graziani's troops on the Ganale Dorya proved to have yielded increasingly more decisive results.

"The pursuit continued all day yesterday without meeting any real resistance by the fleeing adversaries.

"At noon, January 17, our armored car columns had advanced altogether about 200 kilometers from their base.

"Our detachment captured prisoners and munitions abandoned by the adversary, whose dead up to yesterday were ascertained to have reached 5,000.

"Aviation, co-operating actively in the pursuit of the adversary, has bombarded supply centers of Ras Desta Demtu at Neghelli.

"On the Eritrean front there is nothing to report."

Press reports said the Duke of Pistoia had promised his troops in the north that "a decisive battle will be unleashed."

(The Ethiopian government officially denied the Italian claims of a southern victory and termed them "utterly fantastic." The territory was said to be defended only lightly by the Ethiopians.)

Djibouti, French Somaliland, Jan. 18 (AP).—Two of Emperor Haile Selassie's generals have been rushed to northwest Gojjam Province to put down a serious revolt, it was learned from reliable sources in Addis Ababa.

News of battles between loyal troops and rebellious forces have reached Addis Ababa, it was said, but a strict censorship kept it from the public.

Ethiopian officials were described as seriously concerned over the situation.

Kenizmatch Sahle, who is known as the "revolt killer," recently went to Gojjam at the head of several thousand troops to aid Dadjazmatch Habte Miriam, who was dispatched from Addis Ababa several weeks ago in an attempt to restore order.

Mother Plans to Appeal Killer's Death Sentence

Salt Lake City, Jan. 18 (AP).—The mother of Delbert Green, accused triple killer, who has been sentenced four times to death before a firing squad, today said she will appeal to the Governor to save him.

Mrs. Lillie May Alexander, the mother, planned to ask Gov. Henry H. Blood Monday for a reprieve. Green, convicted of killing his uncle six years ago, but also accused of slaying his wife and grandmother, is scheduled to die Friday. Appeals have brought three postponements of his execution date.

Hoffman Acts

ered plausible reasons for further investigation.

Before long, Hoffman probably will issue a formal statement summarizing some of these reasons in much more definite form than his statement of yesterday expressing doubt that Hauptmann could have committed the crime alone.

Unless there is a break before that statement, it is expected to indicate the vagueness of some trial evidence and to intimate that persons other than Hauptmann kidnaped and killed the baby or were involved in the kidnaping.

In order to make good his case, Hoffman must tear down a theory which is firmly supported by Federal agents and most of the law-enforcement officials who participated in the case.

It is: The difficulty and circumstances surrounding the arrest of a suspect tended conclusively to show that only one man could have been involved.

That is, these officials believe that had more than one man been in on the crime the detectives would have had more clews on which to work, they would have found at least some evidence indicating the direction in which to search for the kidnaper and, under normal circumstances, they would have by this time some definite hint as to an accomplice that would withstand investigation.

League Doubts Italian Oil Ban Will Be Voted

Big Powers Now Cool to Proposal; Fear Grows of Ethiopian Victory.

By the Associated Press.

Gepeva, Jan. 18.—Officials of the League of Nations predicted tonight that the greatly advertised proposed oil boycott against Italy would not see the light of day at a meeting of the council beginning Monday.

Great Britain, they pointed out, seems opposed to any British initiative toward imposing new sanctions. Premier Pierre Laval, of France, has always regarded the oil sanction with disfavor.

Soviet Russia is occupied with its appeal to the League against Uruguay's action in breaking off diplomatic relations with her. Other powers, it was said, are likely to follow the lead of the big ones.

Two impressions prevail at Geneva toward Monday's session.

The first is that existing economic sanctions are slowly but surely hindering Premier Mussolini's capacity to wage war.

The second opinion heard—a new and quiet one—is that after all it would not be wise to permit Ethiopian armies to defeat the armies of Italy in any disastrous manner.

Behind this opinion is the idea that such a victory for the Negus might excite all the races of Africa to revolt against European powers with colonies there.

There also is the lurking idea that Il Duce's campaign is not advancing and that a stalemate, if not a defeat for Italy, remains a possibility.

Linked with these opinions come reports from Italians in a position to know governmental thought that Mussolini is willing to examine seriously any new peace proposals.

Geneva is glad that Il Duce's diplomatic lieutenant, Baron Pompeo Aloisi, is coming to the council session and continues to hope that negotiations for a settlement of the war within the spirit of the League Covenant may be started.

Prince Scouts Fear Of Hapsburg Coup

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, Jan. 18.—Austria's powerful vice chancellor, Prince Ernst Von Starhemberg, made plain today that a Hapsburg restoration to the Austrian throne is not imminent and at the same time disclaimed ambitions, long attributed to him, to assume the regency or even the monarchy.

Von Starhemberg, who by virtue of his control of his private army, the Heimwehr, is probably the most influential man in Austria, declared:

"Reports that I want to be king or regent are nonsense which shrieks to high heaven. Nothing of the kind is being planned.

"If and when a monarchy is to be re-established remains a question of time. The present moment is not the time. And I can tell you that the Emperor Otto is of the same opinion.

"I can also say that as long as such an effort might endanger the peace of Europe, there will be no attempt to restore the monarchy."

Some diplomatic observers asserted that the statement would do much to remove political uncertainty in central Europe, where it has long been felt a restoration of the Austrian monarchy, either with Archduke Otto or Von Starhemberg on the throne, might upset the present delicate balance.

The statement came on the eve of th first general assembly of leaders of the patriotic front, the coalition of the various groups supporting the government of Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg.

Paris Student Strikers Hurt in University Clash

Paris, Jan. 18 (AP).—Several students were hurt today in a renewal of fighting in the student strike over the failure of the University of Paris to dismiss Prof. Gaston Jeze, who acted as adviser for Ethiopia at the League of Nations.

The fighting broke out in the medical school where heavy police patrols were attacked by students. Strikers picketing the school were finally chased away, but classes were suspended.

Italian Refinery Blast Kills 5 and Burns 20

Bari, Italy, Jan. 18 (AP).—Five workers were killed and 20 persons, including firemen, were seriously burned when an oxygen tank exploded at an oil refinery here, spraying flames and acids over a wide area.

Sulphur fumes hindered the firemen who fought successfully for ten hours to save neighboring buildings. About 150 workers were imperilled by the flames.

Laval's Cabinet Faces Collapse As Herriot, Others Plan to Quit

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Jan. 18.—Premier Pierre Laval's "save the franc" cabinet was on the verge of collapse tonight as a result of Radical-Socialist desertions.

The fall is expected when the premier returns from Geneva in the middle of next week.

Edouard Herriot's formal decision to resign as minister of state and the announcement that two fellow Radical-Socialists, William Bertrand, minister of marine, and Georges Bonnet, minister of commerce, would join him in quitting the government, reinforced the general impression that a cabinet crisis is only a question of days.

Laval, it was understood, obtained their promise not to resign until he had time to confer at Geneva with Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, on what the League intends to do about the Italo-Ethiopian war and other international problems.

Joseph Paganon, minister of the interior, also was reported ready to resign.

Laval indicated that if any ministers joined Herriot in quitting he would take the resignations of the entire cabinet to President Lebrun.

Col. Francois de la Rocque, leader of the Nationalist Veterans' organization, "Croix de Feu," told 5,000 members at a heavily guarded meeting here today they must "be on call" until the political situation has settled.

Friends of Herriot said he was fed up with political squabbles as well as dissatisfied with Laval's foreign policy. They said he would refuse even to resume the presidency of the Radical Socialists.

That left Edouard Daladier, anti-Laval leader, as the only candidate when the party's executive committee elects Herriot's successor tomorrow, although several "dark horses" have been mentioned for the post.

Conservatives Slated for New Reserve Board

Eccles, Prof. Foster Reported Only Liberals Named by President.

By the Associated Press.

A conservative board and a liberal chairman were reported to have been selected yesterday by President Roosevelt to run the Federal Reserve System after February 1.

Authoritative sources said the tentative selections for the new board would retain only two of the present members — Marriner S. Eccles, slated for the chairmanship, and M. S. Szymczak, of Chicago.

In choosing the new board, President Roosevelt was said to have discussed the matter at length with Senator Glass (Democrat), Virginia, widely known as the father of the Federal Reserve System. Glass was said to have approved the selections.

Others On Tentative List.

The other names placed on the tentative list were:

Joseph P. Broderick, a former New York superintendent of banks.

Ronald Ranson, an official of the Fulton National Bank of Atlanta.

John H. McKee, chief bank examiner of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

William Trufant Foster, a Harvard professor whose writings and lectures have advocated huge Government spending in times of depression.

A farmer, representing agriculture, whose identity was not disclosed.

Neither Ranson nor Foster has formerly been mentioned in connection with places on the new board.

Meets Requirements.

Such a board would meet geographical requirements by including one member from the reserve districts of San Francisco, Chicago, New York, Atlanta, McKee from Cleveland and Foster from Boston. The unnamed farm member could be selected from one of the six remaining districts, presumably from Minneapolis, St. Louis or Kansas City.

Although Glass was expected in some quarters to oppose Eccles' confirmation, he was said to have moderated his opposition on the belief the contemplated roster would act as a check on Eccles' liberalism.

Under the banking act of 1935, the new board of governors must be named by February 1. It shall consist of seven instead of six active members, and will exclude the Secretary of the Treasury and Comptroller of the Currency, who formerly served ex-officio. The President, in making the selection, "shall have due regard to a fair representation of the financial, agricultural, industrial and commercial interests of the country."

Foster Likes His Job.

Boston, Jan. 18 (AP).—A Harvard professor who likes a conservative label because it separates him "from the Huey Longs, the Upton Sinclairs and the Dr. Townsends" learned tonight on his fifty-seventh birthday he had been chosen tentatively for the new Federal Reserve Board.

He is William Trufant Foster, lecturer and writer on economics and public finance. Born in Boston and a graduate of Harvard, he said he would welcome the chance to serve although there had been no official tender of the post yet.

"I'm more interested in that field than in any other," he said. "For the last five years I've lectured on economics, banking and public finance from the University of Maine to the University of California."

He avoided any discussion of what changes in the Nation's money and credit system he might have in mind.

Roosevelt Ball Ticket Demand Swamps Office

Fearing Accommodations Insufficient, Officials Will Limit Sales.

Following announcement of the ticket sale for the President's Birthday Ball, January 30, the office of Commissioner George E. Allen, general chairman of the ball, was swamped yesterday with demands for tickets. Although tickets were on sale at hotels, banks, department stores and elsewhere, many people apparently believed choice tickets could be obtained at the Commissioner's office.

Although the committee has arranged for the ballrooms of the Mayflower, Shoreham, Wardman Park, Washington, Willard and Raleigh hotels for the event, it appears, according to Allen, the sale of tickets will have to be limited in order to avoid any disappointments for those who purchase tickets early.

While these six hotels will accommodate many persons, the dance has taken on the aspect of a city-wide civic carnival and first demands indicate that they will be insufficient to take care of the demands. More hotels can be used but whether it will be possible to have Guy Lombardo and his orchestra, as well as the featured entertainers, appear at more than the six hotels already selected, is a question.

Sale of space in the program is progressing splendidly, according to Col. Edward Goring Bliss, chairman of the program committe. Col. Bliss has named 20 regional chairmen who have charge of the sale of ads according to occupational areas and first results are most encouraging.

Following President Roosevelt's talk on the radio last night, Commissioner Allen made an earnest plea for support of the ball here, pointing out the Children's Hospital is receiving 70 per cent of the funds derived from the ball. Dr. G. W. Leadbetter, famous orthopedic surgeon of Washington, also spoke on this program, describing how infantile paralysis is treated and explaining the facilities at Children's Hospital for handling these cases.

Son of Taft Leads New Deal Attack

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 18.—President Roosevelt was pictured by the son of one of his predecessors today as being willing to mislead the people on financial questions and to "encourage them to believe that the Government owes them a living whether they work or not."

Robert A. Taft, son of the late President and Chief Justice, William Howard Taft, denounced the social security act and other New Deal programs in an address before the Women's National Republican Club.

Speaking on the same program, John D. M. Hamilton, national committeeman from Kansas and general counsel of the Republican national committee, defined the basic issues of the 1936 campaign as "recovery, wasteful spending and centralized government."

Among the honor guests at the luncheon, which marked the fifteenth anniversary of the club, were Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth and Col. Theodore Roosevelt, children of the late President Theodore Roosevelt.

Investigation of School Communism to Be Topic

Action of the Federation of Citizens' Associations investigating the teaching of communism in Washington schools will be discussed at a meeting of the Citizens' Forum of Columbia Heights Tuesday night in Powell Junior High School.

The committee on education will also report on its efforts to obtain more playgrounds for the District.

'Boondoggling' Is Good Word, Says President

New York—perhaps because it was later in the day and the weather had become more disagreeable. Along some blocks of the route from the Pennsylvania Station to the Roosevelt Sixty-fifth street home only two or three persons stopped to stare at the presidential motorcade. In other places hundreds lined the curbs.

The President came here to participate tomorrow in the dedication of the American Museum of Natural History as the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial. His only other New York engagement was a radio broadcast from his home addressed to the President's Birthday Ball National Committee, arranging dances for January 30 to raise money for the medical fight against infantile paralysis.

Seeking to stimulate interest in the Birthday Balls, the President lauded those who have devoted their lives to fighting the dreaded infantile paralysis, of which he was a victim. He said the fight against the disease was "constantly assuming greater and greater National character" and that co-ordination of these efforts was the goal of the Warm Springs Foundation.

70 Per Cent to Local Work.

Mr. Roosevelt explained that 30 per cent of the proceeds of the Birthday Balls is allotted for research work in the cause and treatment of the disease at such institutions as Stanford, Harvard, Pennsylvania, Yale, Southern California and other universities. None of the money goes to Warm Springs, he said, and as last year 70 per cent of the fund raised this year will go "to encourage, stimulate and aid local work."

The meeting of heads of Federal relief and emergency agencies in New Jersey was the first of a series of such meetings to be held in each State. The avowed purpose of the meetings is to bring the Federal and State executives into closer touch with each other in order to consolidate their efficiency.

Since it was the first of such meetings held and was under the direction of the son of Thomas A. Edison, the inventor, the gathering assumed special significance, heightened by the President's attendance. Mr. Roosevelt arrived at the meeting at 2 p. m., having left Washington at 10 a. m.

Hoffman on Stand.

The meeting had been in session since morning when the President arrived. With Mrs. Roosevelt he took a seat on the platform and suggested to Mr. Edison that the meeting go as it had been planned. With him on the platform was Gov. Harold G. Hoffman, fresh from his deliberations over Bruno Hauptmann's case.

Incidentally seated in the first row was David T. Wilentz, the State's attorney general, who successfully prosecuted Hauptmann. A woman tsenographer taking the proceedings of yesterday's meeting also worked at the Hauptmann trial, causing one reporter to remark: "It looks more like the Hauptmann case than a relief meeting." Despite reports that Gov. Hoffman would discuss with the President a proposal for a further Federal investigation into the Hauptmann case, the matter was not mentioned.

For an hour and a half the President sat quietly on the platform as directors of agricultural work, farm credit agencies, the WPA, PWA, CCC, HOLC and FHA read reports detailing the work their organizations had done. They explained that New Deal funds had been spent on projects ranging from the erection of bridges and the clearing of swamps to the eradiaction of germs from dea dand dying elm trees.

When the first speaker completed his report, Mr. Edison turned to Mr. Roosevelt and askel: "Any questions, Mr. President?"

"May I smoke?" the President replied.

The permission was given with hearty applause and Mr. Roosevelt adjusted a cigarette in a long holder and thereafter puffed away as he followed intently the reports.

Addressing the group as "My fellow workers," the President lauded the purpose of the meeting and urged on all Federal workers the necessity of being able to spread the New Deal gospel, that is to be able to give correct information not about their own work but about all agencies in order to combat what he termed "fool questions and fool stories" that are being circulated—a reference which incidentally was omitted from the official transcript of his remarks subsequently made public.

He then went on with his defense of the usefulness of the New Deal projects and made his boondoggling reference, finally concluding with an expression of pride in the work being done in New York and the assertion that "I not only want you to work with me, but I am going to do the best I can to work with you."

Text of Birthday Ball Speech

President Roosevelt's address last night on the birthday balls to aid infantile paralysis sufferers follows:

COL. DOHERTY, MEMBER OF THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE, FRIENDS:

It is a happy privilege to talk to you once again about Georgia Warm Springs Foundation and its fight against infantile paralysis. It is a privilege because I can tell you of the accomplishments of those who are fighting this battle, and it is a duty because, as one of many who are interested and aiding in this battle against a most mysterious and baffling disease, I should pay tribute to those who have given of their skill, energy and material resources to the fight.

Listening tonight also are those who have been the victims of this disease—a disease which attacks with little regard to age and none to race or station; which strikes those in the full stride of useful work as well as children in their play. Small wonder, then, that so many people unite in the attack against it—that the army is one of volunteers. This army needs no cheering from me, but I do want to thank, in the name of Georgia Warm Springs Foundation, all those who in a few days (January 30) will be making their contributions to the fight by attending the thousands of birthday celebrations throughout the country.

Movement Growing.

You should know that this fight against infantile paralysis is constantly assuming a greater and greater national character. Committees of prominent laymen and physicians are playing their part in this broadening of ideals, objectives and usefulness. Co-ordination of all this effort is the purpose and desire of Georgia Warm Springs Foundation. Its institution at Warm Springs itself is one of many places where may be treated patients who have injury remaining after the acute disease is over. It can take care of only a few such patients, and, therefore, in itself, as regards direct treatment, it makes only a very slight impression on the general problem.

It happens that in Georgia Warm Springs nature has provided an unlimited supply of warm water, which assists, simply by virtue of being warm and pure, in the underwater physical treatment of this disease and that training can be given to doctors and physical therapists there.

Under the auspices of the foundation and its committee fighting infantile paralysis are groups co-ordinating the work, the aim of which is to provide more opportunities for the employment and rehabilitation of those who have had infantile paralysis—those who, with only a physical handicap, possess all their mental keenness and the ability and desire to hold their own with their fellow men—those with courage to demand their place in the world's work without asking for special privileges, but only for intelligent recognition of their capabilities.

Fund Supports Research.

Another important group, with advice from most capable medical research experts, is carefully contributing to that part of the battle which involves study of the cause and prevention of infantile paralysis and of the treatment of its acute stages. You know that 30 per cent of the proceeds of last year's birthday celebrations went into a fund which has supported research. Warm Springs Foundation did not set up its own research laboratory and research staff. Why should it? Scientists of acknowledged reputation and ability were already working on the problems relating to infantile paralysis. In many cases they were hampered by lack of personnel and equipment. With the advice of those who were well acquainted with the needs and with the value of certain researches in infantile paralysis, aid was given through the money which a generous public has contributed.

It gives me great satisfaction to tell you that allotments from the research funds derived from the Birthday Celebrations have been made to these institutions: Stanford University, Harvard University, University of Pennsylvania, Long Island College, Yale University, University of Southern California, University of Chicago, City Hospital at Cleveland and New York University. The medical advisory committee has assurances that the work is going forward satisfactorily under these various grants.

Medical Men Commended.

The physicians of this country have co-operated, as they always do when health is threatened and disease must be combated. Great medical organizations, including the American Medical Association, have allied themselves and their resources with the foundation in its efforts to co-ordinate this work. The orthopedic surgeons, that group of physicians who have studied to give all possible assistance to restore to mobility those who are left injured when the acute phase of infantile paralysis is over, have both collectively and individually entered the battle side by side with Warm Springs Foundation. Seventy-five orthopedic surgeons in various parts of the nation are members of the orthopedic advisory committee of the Foundation, and a smaller group, an executive council, gives freely of its time and advice to the board of trustees.

Last year not one penny of the money given went into the work of the institution in Georgia. Seventy per cent of it remained in the communities which raised it to carry out the local fight against infantile paralysis. Thirty per cent was used in the fund to support research. This year 70 per cent again remains to encourage, stimulate and aid local work, and 30 per cent will be used to continue the support of the Foundation in the furtherance of its nation-wide fight against infantile paralysis. Thus, both in ideals and in practical working, Warm Springs Foundation carries on the fight. Therefore, to you who are the warriors, and to you who support these warriors, I give both the thanks of the Foundation and of all those whom the common enemy has attacked—the victims of infantile paralysis themselves—those whom you have helped and encouraged to carry on.

My birthday has been chosen as the occasion for helping this noble work, which evokes from me my most profound gratitude to the people to whom I express my sincere appreciation.

Women's Clubs Resolve to Back Neutrality Law

Federation to Defend Positions of Married Women in Civil Service.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs, largest organization of women in the United States, yesterday threw its support behind the pending neutrality legislation by adopting at the annual midwinter board meeting the following resolution:

"Whereas, legislation is now pending on the embargo provision of the neutrality act, be in resolved that the board of the General Federation, in conference assembled in Washington, January 18, 1936, support in principle a neutrality bill designed to present the United States being drawn into war through being a supply nation to belligerents by furnishing credit or any commodities of war."

The federation's board, before ending the midwinter session at noon, reaffirmed the organization's stand "on the principle of protecting the Civil Service rights of women" and served notice it will take immediate and aggressive action in working toward repeal of section 213 of the economy act of 1932.

The section, usually referred to as the marriage clause, seeks to keep wives whose husbands are Civil Service employes from working for the Government.

Oliphant Is Mentioned To Fill Coolidge Vacancy

By the Associated Press.

The name of Herman Oliphant figured prominently yesterday in unofficial discussion over the successor to Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, resigned Undersecretary of the Treasury.

Coolidge, conservative Bostonian, handed in his resignation yesterday because he did not agree with certain New Deal policies.

Oliphant, former professor of law at Johns Hopkins University and now general counsel to the Treasury, is considered to be more sympathetic toward the New Deal. Secretary Morgenthau is known to regard him highly and many observers believe he will be asked to take the post.

Senate.

Met at noon and recessed at 5:20 p. m. until noon tomorrow.

Defeated amendments to "baby" bond bonus bill, carried it nearly to a vote, but adjourned without passing it.

Heard Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), Missouri, defend record of Senator Gerald P. Nye (Republican), North Dakota, as Munitions Committee chairman.

House.

Not in session.

Appropriations su-committee continued hearings on supply bills.

a candidate, as he had a right to be, but so far as I have ever been informed, did nothing improper or nothing blameworthy in connection with that fight.

"Such animosity as my father had and as I have felt, or as the other members of my family have felt, was directed toward another man, a delegate instructed as a delegate for my father, under a law which he drew himself, and who betrayed my father at the Baltimore convention; namely, William Jennings Bryan.

Clark carefully avoided repeating the charge made by Nye that Wilson and Robert Lansing had "falsified" when they testified before a Senate committee that they knew nothing of secret treaties among the allies until they went to the peace conference in Paris.

Asked directly by Senator Connally (Democrat), Texas, if he agreed with Nye, Clark said:

"So far as I am concerned I have never said, and I do not now say and I do not believe that President Wilson had personal knowledge of the treaties prior to the entrance of the United States in the war."

Nye has charged that Wilson became aware of the treaties, not before this country entered the war, but about six weeks afterward. Connally did not pursue the questioning.

Takes Thrust at Glass.

Interrupting the debate on the soldier bonus bill, Clark opened his talk with a protestation of affection for Senator Glass, but added that Glass had used his "power of vituperation and abuse" against an individual member of the Senate, instead of confining his remarks to the record.

Clark said the purpose of the munition hearings had been "neither abuse nor laudation of any man."

"I submit," he said, "that any public man taking part in public affairs of great moment in a time of stress must know he is making history, and that his acts are a fair subject for investigation of the events with which he was connected."

He said the committee intended no reflection on Wilson, Lansing or Bryan in "soberly and dispassionately examining into the circumstances which took us into a war that was followed by calamity."

Clark then went into a detailed review of the evidence submitted to the committee, including the J. P. Morgan & Co. purchasing contracts with Great Britain and France, the change in policy of the Government against foreign loans, violation of the right of freedom of the seas by Great Britain, support of the sterling exchange by J. P. Morgan & Co. and the whole story of the days preceding entrance of the United States into the war.

"The purpose of all this," Clark continued, "was to draw such lessons from the facts as to help us to act to keep us, if possible, from again entering a web of circumstances such as those which drew us into the war.

"The Munitions Committee is," of course, a creature of the Senate. The Senate gave it authority and it can take that authority away. The Senate, of course, can refuse to appropriate more money.

"Senators may close their eyes and ears to the record."

Defends WPA Employment.

Clark then went into an explanation of the use of WPA workers to compile records in New York.

"I am unable to see any impropriety in a governmental agency availing itself of the services of people the Government wishes to employ," he said. "It would have been necessary in any circumstances for the Government to spend money for this work. It is better that these people were employed in useful work than that they be engaged in boon-doggling."

Clark said that the Committee on Interstate Commerce is employing relief workers. He said that some Senators may think that the $125,000 appropriation, plus $53,000 of relief money was too much for the committee to spend, but he pointed out that the Banking and Currency Committee had spent $260,000 in its investigation during the last session.

Nye interrupted the talk to explain how the committee had come into possession of the Lansing diary, which has been used as a basis for some of its charges. He said the Lansing heirs had agreed that the committee might have access to the diary.

Connally asked Nye if he was ready to accede to the former's request that he tell the Senate how much money he had received for speeches made during the committee inquiry. Connally, in reply to a question from Nye, said he was ready to list his own private income.

"I wonder," said Nye, "if the Senator would join me in a resolution requiring all Senators to list their private incomes."

"I would not," said Connally.

"If the Senator from Texas thinks he is going to embarrass me in talking to the people of the United States, he is mistaken," Nye said. "If I am offered honoraria for my talks I shall accept them."

Nye left last night for a short speaking tour in the Middle West.

Byrnes explained that the use of relief workers by the Interstate Commerce Committee was not parallel with their use by the Nye committee. He said the College of the City of New York was using relief workers to compile for its own use facts which were also desired by the committee and that the committee was obtaining this data from the college.

"That is entirely different from having the City of New York contribute $23,000," Byrnes said.

Clashes With Clark.

Clark and Byrnes then engaged in an argument about how the appropriations for the committee had been made, Clark accusing Byrnes of attempting to block them.

"Ever since the war ended there haye been investigations," Byrnes said. "It is time to legislate, not investigate."

Byrnes said that the last appropriation made to the Nye committee, $25,000, was made with the understanding this would be used to complete the investigation.

He announced he had prepared a resolution appropriating more money and told Nye that if he would fill in the amount desired the committee on audit and control would report it out in 10 minutes.

"Then let the Senate of the United States decide what it wants to do," he said.

"The committee will know what it needs within a matter of hours," Nye said. "There is no prospect of its knowing this afternoon."

Glass Criticizes Spending.

Concluding the discussion, Glass remarked:

"There is not a member of this body with reasonable intelligence who is not familiar with every fact contained in the summation given by the Senator from Missouri. The investigation didn't justify expenditure of $125,000, or 25 cents."

In announcing he had turned over to the Justice Department names of munitions companies failing to register, Secretary Hull said they were principally small companies, although among them were one or two of importance. The companies were to have filed not later than November 29. A total of 115 munitions makers already have registered.

$10,000 Fine Provided.

Hull said that thus far no munitions makers had directly refused to register. The law provides a fine up to $10,000 and imprisonment up to five years for violation.

Twenty-seven companies registering since the last list was made public December 3 are: Aeronautical Corporation of America, Bellanca Aircraft Corporation, China Airmotive Co., Continental Credit Corporation, Crucible Steel Company of America, R. L. Dinely, Henry Disston & Sons, Inc., Edo Aircraft Corporation, Elevator Supplies Corporation, Fairchild Aircraft Corporation, Griffen & Howe, Inc., D. Bryan's Brother Denies Charge.

Lincoln, Nebr., Jan. 18 (AP).—Mayor Charges W. Bryan today asserted his brother, William Jennings Bryan, "never betrayed any one, anywhere, any time, in his life," when informed of Senator Clark's attack on "the great Commoner" in the Senate today.

Clark, son of the late Champ Clark, asserted William Jennings Bryan, Secretary of State under President Wilson, "betrayed 'Champ' Clark at the Democratic convention in Baltimore, where Wilson defeated the Missourian in 1912 for the Presidential nomination.

"The published records of William Jennings Bryan's life prove my statement," Mayor Bryan, thrice Governor of Nebraska, asserted.

Mayor Bryan, who in 1924 was the Democratic Vice Presidential nominee, said he clearly remembered the Baltimore convention, and that the Nebraska Democratic committee met a short time following the national session and indorsed the action of his brother and the Nebraska delegates.

Roosevelt Foes In Party Expect 10,000 at Rally

'Good Democrats' of South to Gather in Georgia January 29.

By the Associated Press.

Houston, Tex., Jan. 18.—John Henry Kirby, veteran of the political wars and wealthy Texas lumberman, predicted today 10,000 "good Democrats" would gather at Macon, Ga., January 29 for a South-wide convention of anti-Roosevelt Democrats.

Kirby and Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia called the convention.

"We will start the ball rolling and we hope it will gain such momentum that President Roosevelt, who is a Socialist instead of a Democrat, will not be renominated," said Kirby, chairman of the Southern Committee to Uphold the Constitution.

He named Jesse Jones, wealthy fellow Texan and chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as a "possibility" in the event President Roosevelt's renomination is balked. He said he believed Jones could defeat any Republican nominee.

He said if the Texas Presidential nominating conventions did not espouse the principles of "real democracy," which would be restated at the Georgia gathering, and did not name delegates who would vote for a candidate in sympathy with those principles, contesting delegations would be sent to the national Democratic convention.

Georgian Refuses Offer.

Atlanta, Jan. 18 (AP).—Wiley Moore, wealthy Atlanta oil man, today declined a proffer to manage President Roosevelt's re-election campaign in Georgia.

Moore, a member of Gov. Eugene Talmadge's honorary military staff, wired Senator Walter F. George at Washington that the serious illness of his wife would prevent his acceptance.

However, he informed the Senator, he was "100 per cent" for President Roosevelt and "will do all I can in his behalf."

Usually the Democratic national committeeman heads the party's campaign in a State, but in the case of Georgia, where Gov. Talmadge is the national committeeman, the President's organization wants another outstanding leader.

Montgomery, Ala., Jan. 18 (AP).—Alabama's Democratic executive committee today elected the State's entire delegation to the national convention at Philadelphia and called a Presidential preferential primary for May 5.

It was the first time since 1924 the delegation was not elected by the people. After a bitter floor fight, the new plan carried, 36 to 29.

In 1924, the late Oscar Underwood, who won the Presidential preference primary, was authorized to name the delegation.

As the date was set, there was a possibility the name of Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia, persistent New Deal foe, will be placed on the ballot with that of President Roosevelt.

California Fight.

Los Angeles, Jan. 18 (AP).—The campaign organization that helped Upton Sinclair poll 879,000 votes for governor in 1934 rallied here tonight still intent on naming California's delegation to the Democratic national convention at Philadelphia.

Leaders of the End Poverty League, Inc., which opened a two-day State convention today, persisted in their attempts for delegate and platform control despite their defeat by forces of Senator W. G. McAdoo in a meeting of the Democratic State central committee last night.

The Democratic committee, dominated by McAdoo lieutenants with pockets full of proxies, decided to leave selection of the California delegation to President Roosevelt and forestalled any expression of policy.

EPIC leaders predicted today the 600 convention delegates, in addition to naming a Democratic delegation, would adopt vigorous resolutions favoring production-for-use for the unemployed as a national platform plank.

The plan has been fostered by Sinclair, a former Socialist.

Army 'Pep' Rally.

Major Harry L. Purdum has arranged a "pep" rally for Salvation Army corps cadets Wednesday night at the Salvation Army Temple, 606 E street northwest. Refreshments will be served. Members of the different corps will present skits illustrating Salvation Army activities. There will also be talks by Adj. Henry Wilkins and by Maj. and Mrs. Harry L. Purdum.

Address on Sweden.

An address on "Sweden" will be given by Arthur Peterson before a meeting of the Wanderlust Travel Club Tuesday night at the home of Miss Eileen Robinson, 5302 Eighth street northwest. The meeting will be open to the public.

Bonus Bill

marchers that encamped near the Capitol when agitation for immediate payment reached an impassioned peak near the end of the Hoover Administration.

Apart from the bonus, the Government already has paid out more than $7,000,000,000 for pensions, hospital and medical care, and other service to veterans.

Throughout 17 years it has been an issue, every President has taken a flat stand against bonus prepayment. President Roosevelt, himself, has vetoed one bonus bill and frequently has spoken forthrightly against immediate settlement, but of late he has been silent. Whether he will veto the present measure has been open to speculation in recent weeks. Leaders admit having tried to win his approval, and boldly predict passage over a veto.

Hastings Cites Record.

Citing the President's bonus record and his demand for passage of an economy act not only slashing Federal salaries but reducing veterans' benefits, Senator Hastings told the Senate yesterday:

"I want to know why the country does not know where the President stands on this issue. No one can read his veto message of last May without believing beyond all question that he is opposed to it. Yet, on this floor, I find the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Harrison (Democrat), Mississippi, intimating that this bill might be satisfactory to the President."

Hastings hooted at suggestions by Harrison and Byrnes that a great bloc of veterans will not cash their bonds but will hold them for interest.

"I am very much afraid that what we are doing here will tend to reduce the value of all Government bonds," he said. "I don't know but what a day might come when the Government may have to repudiate all of its bonds. I know if I were a veteran, and I believe others will think that way, I would cash these bonds."

In advancing his inflation proposal, Senator Thomas assailed the coalition (Harrison-Byrnes-Clark-Steiwer) bond-payment measure as a "terrifically unfair, unjust and burdensome bill." Through increased gratuities, it actually pays four bonuses instead of one he asserted, declaring that it will bring "bond inflation" as opposed to the currency expansion charged against his own substitute.

The bill, now heading rapidly toward final disposition, would pay the bonus in negotiable bonds in multiples of $50, which he could cash immediately at postoffices, or draw 3 per cent interest on them after June 15, 1937. Unpaid interest owed by the veterans on bonus borrowings would be cancelled as of September 30, 1931.

Postal Official Bars G. O. P. Comic Stamps

Cartoons Held Unmailable as Reflection on Ideals of President.

By the Associated Press.

Three of the cartoon stamps issued by a New York Republican group, but repudiated by the Republican national committee, were banned as "unmailable" yesterday in an opinion by Solicitor Carl A. Crowley, of the Postoffice Department.

Crowley described the banned stickers as showing:

President Roosevelt as "Frankenstein"—"an astonished and frightened individual bearing an intended resemblance to the President observing a giant labeled 'Bureaucratic Government,' dressed in Russian costume, treading upon industrial plants labeled 'United States Business.'"

Two Stamps Passed.

"The President flippantly lighting a cigarette from a taper composed of a scroll labeled 'Constitution of the United States.'"

"The President and Mrs. Roosevelt seated on the Democratic donkey at the very edge of a precipice, * * * both portrayed as laughing while the former holds before him a megaphone and Mrs. Roosevelt holds aloft a communistic banner."

Two other stamps, also stuck on letters presented for mailing at the New York postoffice, were passed as mailable "as they relate solely to abstractions."

Crowley cited a law barring from envelopes "delineations, epithets, terms or language" which are "intended to reflect injuriously upon the character or conduct of another."

"The stickers * * * fall within the prohibition * * * in that they attribute to the President certain impeachable actions and unpraiseworthy attitude, as well as lack of foresight, i. e., things contributing in no small measure to one's character," Crowley ruled.

Reflection on Character.

"To be likened to 'Frankenstein' as a creator of something maleficent certainly reflects no credit upon one's character. * * *

"To intimate that one sworn to uphold the Constitution holds that obligation so lightly as nonchalantly to employ its destruction as a means to facilitate the procurement of the slight personal pleasure to be derived from the smoking of a cigarette, is to reflect upon one's morality and mentality, and therefore upon his character."

"The postage stamp placed on a letter is to pay for the handling and delivery of a letter and not for the publication and dissemination of personal views and propaganda," he concluded, "and when such are indulged in to the extent of reflecting injuriously upon the character or conduct of another, the postal service must treat the matter as unmailable and decline to carry it."

Baby's Parentage Upheld by Judge

Justice Jesse C. Adkins, in the District Supreme Court, in an oral opinion, yesterday ruled that 13-month-old James B. Kessler, whose paternity was disputed by James Brooke Kessler, its father, was in fact his child and should be supported by the father.

The decision came about in a suit for divorce between the Kesslers, in which Mrs. Lois E. Kessler, the wife, sought a blood test to determine the child's paternity. Two physicians made the test and their report was substantially that the child was one of a large group of "blood types" and was included in the same class as its father.

The Kesslers parted in 1934. In his announcement Justice Adkins said he would grant the husband a divorce.

Bandit Chief, Free, Tracks Down Band

Manila, Jan. 18 (AP).—An erstwhile bandit chief, temporarily free on his honor, went into the hills tonight to round up the remnants of his once powerful robber band for punishment.

With a small army after him and a $5,000 price on his head, the bandit, Nicholas Encallado, surrendered yesterday through negotiations carried on by his daughter, Aurelia.

President Manuel Quezon immediately released him on his promise to find what remains of his outlaw band, accused of killing 11 persons. Encallado was told to surrender his seven followers, including his three sons, and face sedition charges himself.

preservation of fertility, and not merely erosion control."

Secretary Wallace stated that he believed "public opinion would not tolerate" the refund to manufacturers of $1,000,000,000 paid in AAA processing taxes. He said both the $1,000,000,000 collected and the $2,000,000,000 impounded in court action should be held in the same status, and that the public would be "gravely concerned" over attempts of manufacturers to get the money back. He pointed out that these taxes were passed on to the consumer by processing firms.

This comment was directed at the Supreme Court's decision in the Louisiana rice millers' case, which has been interpreted as requiring the return of the impounded $200,000,000.

Carrying out predictions made that the Administration strategy probably would be to amend the Soil Conservation Act's Civil Service clause to allow the transfer bodily of the AAA organization into the Soil Conservation Service, the Secretary declared yesterday that the AAA organization in the field would be ideal to handle the new farm program. He said further that the agency's personnel probably would deal with the soil conservation and soil fertility angles, while the Soil Conservation Service itself would handle erosion control.

The Secretary directed newsmen's attention to a departmental survey which classed land in four grades as to the degree of slope and the danger of erosion, A, B, C and D. A and B slopes can be cultivated without serious danger of erosion. The Secretary said that 35,000,000 acres now planted in corn, wheat and cotton are on C and D slopes, where erosion is constant and seriously damaging, and that such slopes should be planted with grass or trees.

This was in the sense of wind and water erosion, however, as contrasted with the President's distinction of Friday when he added destruction of soil fertility by continued careless planting of one crop over a period of years to the erosion list.

The Secretary added that foreign purchasing power must be built up, a belief he often has stated, and insisted that today there is no market for the products of about 50,000,000 acres of the Nation's commercial crop land.

He predicted reduction of the amount of corn loans from the 1935 crop, now at 45 cents a bushel, stating that without production control corn loans could not be continued indefinitely and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation probably would demand such a reduction.

Conservatives Slated for New Reserve Board

Eccles, Prof. Foster Reported Only Liberals Named by President.

By the Associated Press.

A conservative board and a liberal chairman were reported to have been selected yesterday by President Roosevelt to run the Federal Reserve System after February 1.

Authoritative sources said the tentative selections for the new board would retain only two of the present members — Marriner S. Eccles, slated for the chairmanship, and M. S. Szymczak, of Chicago.

In choosing the new board, President Roosevelt was said to have discussed the matter at length with Senator Glass (Democrat), Virginia, widely known as the father of the Federal Reserve System. Glass was said to have approved the selections.

Others On Tentative List.

The other names placed on the tentative list were:

Joseph P. Broderick, a former New York superintendent of banks.

Ronald Ranson, an official of the Fulton National Bank of Atlanta.

John H. McKee, chief bank examiner of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

William Trufant Foster, a Harvard professor whose writings and lectures have advocated huge Government spending in times of depression.

A farmer, representing agriculture, whose identity was not disclosed.

Neither Ranson nor Foster has formerly been mentioned in connection with places on the new board.

Meets Requirements.

Such a board would meet geographical requirements by including one member from the reserve districts of San Francisco, Chicago, New York, Atlanta, McKee from Cleveland and Foster from Boston. The unnamed farm member could be selected from one of the six remaining districts, presumably from Minneapolis, St. Louis or Kansas City.

Although Glass was expected in some quarters to oppose Eccles' confirmation, he was said to have moderated his opposition on the belief the contemplated roster would act as a check on Eccles' liberalism.

Under the banking act of 1935, the new board of governors must be named by February 1. It shall consist of seven instead of six active members, and will exclude the Secretary of the Treasury and Comptroller of the Currency, who formerly served ex-officio. The President, in making the selection, "shall have due regard to a fair representation of the financial, agricultural, industrial and commercial interests of the country."

Foster Likes His Job.

Boston, Jan. 18 (AP).—A Harvard professor who likes a conservative label because it separates him "from the Huey Longs, the Upton Sinclairs and the Dr. Townsends" learned tonight on his fifty-seventh birthday he had been chosen tentatively for the new Federal Reserve Board.

He is William Trufant Foster, lecturer and writer on economics and public finance. Born in Boston and a graduate of Harvard, he said he would welcome the chance to serve although there had been no official tender of the post yet.

"I'm more interested in that field than in any other," he said. "For the last five years I've lectured on economics, banking and public finance from the University of Maine to the University of California."

He avoided any discussion of what changes in the Nation's money and credit system he might have in mind.

Roosevelt Ball Ticket Demand Swamps Office

Fearing Accommodations Insufficient, Officials Will Limit Sales.

Following announcement of the ticket sale for the President's Birthday Ball, January 30, the office of Commissioner George E. Allen, general chairman of the ball, was swamped yesterday with demands for tickets. Although tickets were on sale at hotels, banks, department stores and elsewhere, many people apparently believed choice tickets could be obtained at the Commissioner's office.

Although the committee has arranged for the ballrooms of the Mayflower, Shoreham, Wardman Park, Washington, Willard and Raleigh hotels for the event, it appears, according to Allen, the sale of tickets will have to be limited in order to avoid any disappointments for those who purchase tickets early.

While these six hotels will accommodate many persons, the dance has taken on the aspect of a city-wide civic carnival and first demands indicate that they will be insufficient to take care of the demands. More hotels can be used but whether it will be possible to have Guy Lombardo and his orchestra, as well as the featured entertainers, appear at more than the six hotels already selected, is a question.

Sale of space in the program is progressing splendidly, according to Col. Edward Goring Bliss, chairman of the program committe. Col. Bliss has named 20 regional chairmen who have charge of the sale of ads according to occupational areas and first results are most encouraging.

Following President Roosevelt's talk on the radio last night, Commissioner Allen made an earnest plea for support of the ball here, pointing out the Children's Hospital is receiving 70 per cent of the funds derived from the ball. Dr. G. W. Leadbetter, famous orthopedic surgeon of Washington, also spoke on this program, describing how infantile paralysis is treated and explaining the facilities at Children's Hospital for handling these cases.

Son of Taft Leads New Deal Attack

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 18.—President Roosevelt was pictured by the son of one of his predecessors today as being willing to mislead the people on financial questions and to "encourage them to believe that the Government owes them a living whether they work or not."

Robert A. Taft, son of the late President and Chief Justice, William Howard Taft, denounced the social security act and other New Deal programs in an address before the Women's National Republican Club.

Speaking on the same program, John D. M. Hamilton, national committeeman from Kansas and general counsel of the Republican national committee, defined the basic issues of the 1936 campaign as "recovery, wasteful spending and centralized government."

Among the honor guests at the luncheon, which marked the fifteenth anniversary of the club, were Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth and Col. Theodore Roosevelt, children of the late President Theodore Roosevelt.

Investigation of School Communism to Be Topic

'Boondoggling' Is Good Word, Says President

New York—perhaps because it was later in the day and the weather had become more disagreeable. Along some blocks of the route from the Pennsylvania Station to the Roosevelt Sixty-fifth street home only two or three persons stopped to stare at the presidential motorcade. In other places hundreds lined the curbs.

The President came here to participate tomorrow in the dedication of the American Museum of Natural History as the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial. His only other New York engagement was a radio broadcast from his home addressed to the President's Birthday Ball National Committee, arranging dances for January 30 to raise money for the medical fight against infantile paralysis.

Seeking to stimulate interest in the Birthday Balls, the President lauded those who have devoted their lives to fighting the dreaded infantile paralysis, of which he was a victim. He said the fight against the disease was "constantly assuming greater and greater National character" and that co-ordination of these efforts was the goal of the Warm Springs Foundation.

70 Per Cent to Local Work.

Mr. Roosevelt explained that 30 per cent of the proceeds of the Birthday Balls is allotted for research work in the cause and treatment of the disease at such institutions as Stanford, Harvard, Pennsylvania, Yale, Southern California and other universities. None of the money goes to Warm Springs, he said, and as last year 70 per cent of the fund raised this year will go "to encourage, stimulate and aid local work."

The meeting of heads of Federal relief and emergency agencies in New Jersey was the first of a series of such meetings to be held in each State. The avowed purpose of the meetings is to bring the Federal and State executives into closer touch with each other in order to consolidate their efficiency.

Since it was the first of such meetings held and was under the direction of the son of Thomas A. Edison, the inventor, the gathering assumed special significance, heightened by the President's attendance. Mr. Roosevelt arrived at the meeting at 2 p. m., having left Washington at 10 a. m.

Hoffman on Stand.

The meeting had been in session since morning when the President arrived. With Mrs. Roosevelt he took a seat on the platform and suggested to Mr. Edison that the meeting go as it had been planned. With him on the platform was Gov. Harold G. Hoffman, fresh from his deliberations over Bruno Hauptmann's case.

Incidentally seated in the first row was David T. Wilentz, the State's attorney general, who successfully prosecuted Hauptmann. A woman tsenographer taking the proceedings of yesterday's meeting also worked at the Hauptmann trial, causing one reporter to remark: "It looks more like the Hauptmann case than a felief meeting." Despite reports that Gov. Hoffman would discuss with the President a proposal for a further Federal investigation into the Hauptmann case, the matter was not mentioned.

For an hour and a half the President sat quietly on the platform as diretcors of agricultural work, farm credit agencies, the WPA, PWA, CCC, HOLC and FHA read reports detailing the work their organizations had done. They explained that New Deal funds had been spent on projects ranging from the erection of bridges and the clearing of swamps to the eradiaction of germs from dea dand dying elm trees.

When the first speaker completed his report, Mr. Edison turned to Mr. Roosevelt and askel: "Any questions, Mr. President?"

"May I smoke?" the President replied.

The permission was given with hearty applause and Mr. Roosevelt adjusted a cigarette in a long holder and thereafter puffed away as he followed intently the reports.

Addressing the group as "My fellow workers," the President lauded the purpose of the meeting and urged on all Federal workers the necessity of being able to spread the New Deal gospel, that is to be able to give correct information not about their own work but about all agencies in order to combat what he termed "fool questions and fool stories" that are being circulated—a reference which incidentally was omitted from the official transcript of his remarks subsequently made public.

He then went on with his defense of the usefulness of the New Deal projects and made his boondoggling reference, finally concluding with an expression of pride in the work being done in New York and the assertion that "I not only want you to work with me, but I am going to do the best I can to work with you."

Text of Birthday Ball Speech

President Roosevelt's address last night on the birthday balls to aid infantile paralysis sufferers follows:

COL. DOHERTY, MEMBER OF THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE, FRIENDS:

It is a happy privilege to talk to you once again about Georgia Warm Springs Foundation and its fight against infantile paralysis. It is a privilege because I can tell you of the accomplishments of those who are fighting this battle, and it is a duty because, as one of many who are interested and aiding in this battle against a most mysterious and baffling disease, I should pay tribute to those who have given of their skill, energy and material resources to the fight.

Listening tonight also are those who have been the victims of this disease—a disease which attacks with little regard to age and none to race or station; which strikes those in the full stride of useful work as well as children in their play. Small wonder, then, that so many people unite in the attack against it—that the army is one of volunteers. This army needs no cheering from me, but I do want to thank, in the name of Georgia Warm Springs Foundation, all those who in a few days (January 30) will be making their contributions to the fight by attending the thousands of birthday celebrations throughout the country.

Movement Growing.

You should know that this fight against infantile paralysis is constantly assuming a greater and greater national character. Committees of prominent laymen and physicians are playing their part in this broadening of ideals, objectives and usefulness. Co-ordination of all this effort is the purpose and desire of Georgia Warm Springs Foundation. Its institution at Warm Springs itself is one of many places where may be treated patients who have injury remaining after the acute disease is over. It can take care of only a few such patients, and, therefore, in itself, as regards direct treatment, it makes only a very slight impression on the general problem.

It happens that in Georgia Warm Springs nature has provided an unlimited supply of warm water, which assists, simply by virtue of being warm and pure, in the underwater physical treatment of this disease and that training can be given to doctors and physical therapists there.

Under the auspices of the foundation and its committee fighting infantile paralysis are groups co-ordinating the work, the aim of which is to provide more opportunities for the employment and rehabilitation of those who have had infantile paralysis—those who, with only a physical handicap, possess all their mental keenness and the ability and desire to hold their own with their fellow men—those with courage to demand their place in the world's work without asking for special privileges, but only for intelligent recognition of their capabilities.

Fund Supports Research.

Another important group, with advice from most capable medical research experts, is carefully contributing to that part of the battle which involves study of the cause and prevention of infantile paralysis and of the treatment of its acute stages. You know that 30 per cent of the proceeds of last year's birthday celebrations went into a fund which has supported research. Warm Springs Foundation did not set up its own research laboratory and research staff. Why should it? Scientists of acknowledged reputation and ability were already working on the problems relating to infantile paralysis. In many cases they were hampered by lack of personnel and equipment. With the advice of those who were well acquainted with the needs and with the value of certain researches in infantile paralysis, aid was given through the money which a generous public has contributed.

It gives me great satisfaction to tell you that allotments from the research funds derived from the Birthday Celebrations have been made to these institutions: Stanford University, Harvard University, University of Pennsylvania, Long Island College, Yale University, University of Southern California, University of Chicago, City Hospital at Cleveland and New York University. The medical advisory committee has assurances that the work is going forward satisfactorily under these various grants.

Medical Men Commended.

The physicians of this country have co-operated, as they always do when health is threatened and disease must be combated. Great medical organizations, including the American Medical Association, have allied themselves and their resources with the foundation in its efforts to co-ordinate this work. The orthopedic surgeons, that group of physicians who have studied to give all possible assistance to restore to mobility those who are left injured when the acute phase of infantile paralysis is over, have both collectively and individually entered the battle side by side with Warm Springs Foundation. Seventy-five orthopedic surgeons in various parts of the nation are members of the orthopedic advisory committee of the Foundation, and a smaller group, an executive council, gives freely of its time and advice to the board of trustees.

Last year not one penny of the money given went into the work of the institution in Georgia. Seventy per cent of it remained in the communities which raised it to carry out the local fight against infantile paralysis. Thirty per cent was used in the fund to support research. This year 70 per cent again remains to encourage, stimulate and aid local work, and 30 per cent will be used to continue the support of the Foundation in the furtherance of its nation-wide fight against infantile paralysis. Thus, both in ideals and in practical working, Warm Springs Foundation carries on the fight. Therefore, to you who are the warriors, and to you who support these warriors, I give both the thanks of the Foundation and of all those whom the common enemy has attacked—the victims of infantile paralysis themselves—those whom you have helped and encouraged to carry on.

My birthday has been chosen as the occasion for helping this noble work, which evokes from me my most profound gratitude to the people to whom I express my sincere appreciation.

Women's Clubs Resolve to Back Neutrality Law

Federation to Defend Positions of Married Women in Civil Service.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs, largest organization of women in the United States, yesterday threw its support behind the pending neutrality legislation by adopting at the annual midwinter board meeting the following resolution:

"Whereas, legislation is now pending on the embargo provision of the neutrality act, be in resolved that the board of the General Federation, in conference assembled in Washington, January 18, 1936, support in principle a neutrality bill designed to present the United States being drawn into war through being a supply nation to belligerents by furnishing credit or any commodities of war."

The federation's board, before ending the midwinter session at noon, reaffirmed the organization's stand "on the principle of protecting the Civil Service rights of women" and served notice it will take immediate and aggressive action in working toward repeal of section 213 of the economy act of 1932.

The section, usually referred to as the marriage clause, seeks to keep wives whose husbands are Civil Service employes from working for the Government.

Oliphant Is Mentioned To Fill Coolidge Vacancy

By the Associated Press.

The name of Herman Oliphant figured prominently yesterday in unofficial discussion over the successor to Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, resigned Undersecretary of the Treasury.

Coolidge, conservative Bostonian, handed in his resignation yesterday because he did not agree with certain New Deal policies.

Oliphant, former professor of law at Johns Hopkins University and now general counsel to the Treasury, is considered to be more sympathetic toward the New Deal. Secretary Morgenthau is known to regard him highly and many observers believe he will be asked to take the post.

a candidate, as he had a right to be, but so far as I have ever been informed, did nothing improper or nothing blameworthy in connection with that fight.

"Such animosity as my father had and as I have felt, or as the other members of my family have felt, was directed toward another man, a delegate instructed as a delegate for my father, under a law which he drew himself, and who betrayed my father at the Baltimore convention; namely, William Jennings Bryan.

Clark carefully avoided repeating the charge made by Nye that Wilson and Robert Lansing had "falsified" when they testified before a Senate committee that they knew nothing of secret treaties among the allies until they went to the peace conference in Paris.

Asked directly by Senator Connally (Democrat), Texas, if he agreed with Nye, Clark said:

"So far as I am concerned I have never said, and I do not now say and I do not believe that President Wilson had personal knowledge of the treaties prior to the entrance of the United States in the war."

Nye has charged that Wilson became aware of the treaties, not before this country entered the war, but about six weeks afterward. Connally did not pursue the questioning.

Takes Thrust at Glass.

Interrupting the debate on the soldier bonus bill, Clark opened his talk with a protestation of affection for Senator Glass, but added that Glass had used his "power of vituperation and abuse" against an individual member of the Senate, instead of confining his remarks to the record.

Clark said the purpose of the munition hearings had been "neither abuse nor laudation of any man."

"I submit," he said, "that any public man taking part in public affairs of great moment in a time of stress must know he is making history, and that his acts are a fair subject for investigation of the events with which he was connected."

He said the committee intended no reflection on Wilson, Lansing or Bryan in "soberly and dispassionately examining into the circumstances which took us into a war that was followed by calamity."

Clark then went into a detailed review of the evidence submitted to the committee, including the J. P. Morgan & Co. purchasing contracts with Great Britain and France, the change in policy of the Government against foreign loans, violation of the right of freedom of the seas by Great Britain, support of the sterling exchange by J. P. Morgan & Co. and the whole story of the days preceding entrance of the United States into the war.

"The purpose of all this," Clark continued, "was to draw such lessons from the facts as to help us to act to keep us, if possible, from again entering a web of circumstances such as those which drew us into the war.

"The Munitions Committee is," of course, a creature of the Senate. The Senate gave it authority and it can take that authority away. The Senate, of course, can refuse to appropriate more money.

"Senators may close their eyes and ears to the record."

Defends WPA Employment.

Clark then went into an explanation of the use of WPA workers to compile records in New York.

"I am unable to see any impropriety in a governmental agency availing itself of the services of people the Government wishes to employ," he said. "It would have been necessary in any circumstances for the Government to spend money for this work. It is better that these people were employed in useful work than that they be engaged in boon-doggling."

Clark said that the Committee on Interstate Commerce is employing relief workers. He said that some Senators may think that the $125,000 appropriation, plus $53,000 of relief money was too much for the committee to spend, but he pointed out that the Banking and Currency Committee had spent $260,000 in its investigation during the last session.

Nye interrupted the talk to explain how the committee had come into possession of the Lansing diary, which has been used as a basis for some of its charges. He said the Lansing heirs had agreed that the committee might have access to the diary.

Connally asked Nye if he was ready to accede to the former's request that he tell the Senate how much money he had received for speeches made during the committee inquiry. Connally, in reply to a question from Nye, said he was ready to list his own private income.

"I wonder," said Nye, "if the Senator would join me in a resolution requiring all Senators to list their private incomes."

"I would not," said Connally.

"If the Senator from Texas thinks he is going to embarrass me in talking to the people of the United States, he is mistaken," Nye said. "If I am offered honoraria for my talks I shall accept them."

Nye left last night for a short speaking tour in the Middle West.

Byrnes explained that the use of relief workers by the Interstate Commerce Committee was not parallel with their use by the Nye committee. He said the College of the City of New York was using relief workers to compile for its own use facts which were also desired by the committee and that the committee was obtaining this data from the college.

"That is entirely different from having the City of New York contribute $23,000," Byrnes said.

Clashes With Clark.

Clark and Byrnes then engaged in an argument about how the appropriations for the committee had been made, Clark accusing Byrnes of attempting to block them.

"Ever since the war ended there have been investigations," Byrnes said. "It is time to legislate, not investigate."

Byrnes said that the last appropriation made to the Nye committee, $25,000, was made with the understanding this would be used to complete the investigation.

He announced he had prepared a resolution appropriating more money and told Nye that if he would fill in the amount desired the committee on audit and control would report it out in 10 minutes.

"Then let the Senate of the United States decide what it wants to do," he said.

"The committee will know what it needs within a matter of hours," Nye said. "There is no prospect of its knowing this afternoon."

Glass Criticizes Spending.

Concluding the discussion, Glass remarked:

"There is not a member of this body with reasonable intelligence who is not familiar with every fact contained in the summation given by the Senator from Missouri. The investigation didn't justify expenditure of $125,000, or 25 cents."

In announcing he had turned over to the Justice Department names of munitions companies failing to register, Secretary Hull said they were principally small companies, although among them were one or two of importance. The companies were to have filed not later than November 29. A total of 115 munitions makers already have registered.

$10,000 Fine Provided.

Hull said that thus far no munitions makers had directly refused to register. The law provides a fine up to $10,000 and imprisonment up to five years for violation.

Twenty-seven companies registering since the last list was made public December 3 are: Aeronautical Corporation of America, Bellanca Aircraft Corporation, China Airmotive Co., Continental Credit Corporation, Crucible Steel Company of America, R. L. Dinely, Henry Disston & Sons, Inc., Edo Aircraft Corporation, Elevator Supplies Corporation, Fairchild Aircraft Corporation, Griffen & Howe, Inc., D. Hadjopoulos & Co., Hartzell Industries, Inc., LeBlond Aircraft Engine Corporation, Menasco Manufacturing Co., Mercury Aircraft, Inc., Molded Insulation Co., Moore-Eastwood Manufacturing Co., National Forge & Ordnance Co., Pollak Manufacturing Co., Ranger Engineering Co., R. A. Rearwin, Seversky Aircraft Corporation, St. Louis Aircraft Corporation, the Treadeger Co., United Airlines Transport Corporation and Wah Chang Trading Corporation.

Bryan's Brother Denies Charge.

Lincoln, Nebr., Jan. 18 (AP).—Mayor Charges W. Bryan today asserted his brother, William Jennings Bryan, "never betrayed any one, anywhere, any time, in his life," when informed of Senator Clark's attack on "the great Commoner" in the Senate today.

Clark, son of the late Champ Clark, asserted William Jennings Bryan, Secretary of State under President Wilson, "betrayed 'Champ' Clark at the Democratic convention in Baltimore, where Wilson defeated the Missourian in 1912 for the Presidential nomination.

"The published records of William Jennings Bryan's life prove my statement," Mayor Bryan, thrice Governor of Nebraska, asserted.

Mayor Bryan, who in 1924 was the Democratic Vice Presidential nominee, said he clearly remembered the Baltimore convention, and that the Nebraska Democratic committee met a short time following the national session and indorsed the action of his brother and the Nebraska delegates.

The Senate yesterday confirmed John Van A. MacMurray, of Maryland, as ambassador to Turkey; Arthur Bliss Lane, of New York, as minister to Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania, and Boaz Long, of New Mexico, as minister to Nicaragua.

A petition for an injunction against the enforcement of the California "Little AAA" was asked by Dr. Harry W. Forbes, head of committee of 65 grapefruit growers of the Coachella and Imperial Valleys.

Roosevelt Foes In Party Expect 10,000 at Rally

'Good Democrats' of South to Gather in Georgia January 29.

By the Associated Press.

Houston, Tex., Jan. 18.—John Henry Kirby, veteran of the political wars and wealthy Texas lumberman, predicted today 10,000 "good Democrats" would gather at Macon, Ga., January 29 for a South-wide convention of anti-Roosevelt Democrats.

Kirby and Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia called the convention.

"We will start the ball rolling and we hope it will gain such momentum that President Roosevelt, who is a Socialist instead of a Democrat, will not be renominated," said Kirby, chairman of the Southern Committee to Uphold the Constitution.

He named Jesse Jones, wealthy fellow Texan and chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as a "possibility" in the event President Roosevelt's renomination is balked. He said he believed Jones could defeat any Republican nominee.

He said if the Texas Presidential nominating conventions did not espouse the principles of "real democracy," which would be restated at the Georgia gathering, and did not name delegates who would vote for a candidate in sympathy with those principles, contesting delegations would be sent to the national Democratic convention.

Georgian Refuses Offer.

Atlanta, Jan. 18 (AP).—Wiley Moore, wealthy Atlanta oil man, today declined a proffer to manage President Roosevelt's re-election campaign in Georgia.

Moore, a member of Gov. Eugene Talmadge's honorary military staff, wired Senator Walter F. George at Washington that the serious illness of his wife would prevent his acceptance.

However, he informed the Senator, he was "100 per cent" for President Roosevelt and "will do all I can in his behalf."

Usually the Democratic national committeeman heads the party's campaign in a State, but in the case of Georgia, where Gov. Talmadge is the national committeeman, the President's organization wants another outstanding leader.

Montgomery, Ala., Jan. 18 (AP).—Alabama's Democratic executive committee today elected the State's entire delegation to the national convention at Philadelphia and called a Presidential preferential primary for May 5.

It was the first time since 1924 the delegation was not elected by the people. After a bitter floor fight, the new plan carried, 36 to 29.

In 1924, the late Oscar Underwood, who won the Presidential preference primary, was authorized to name the delegation.

As the date was set, there was a possibility the name of Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia, persistent New Deal foe, will be placed on the ballot with that of President Roosevelt.

California Fight.

Los Angeles, Jan. 18 (AP).—The campaign organization that helped Upton Sinclair poll 879,000 votes for governor in 1934 rallied here tonight still intent on naming California's delegation to the Democratic national convention at Philadelphia.

Leaders of the End Poverty League, Inc., which opened a two-day State convention today, persisted in their attempts for delegate and platform control despite their defeat by forces of Senator W. G. McAdoo in a meeting of the Democratic State central committee last night.

The Democratic committee, dominated by McAdoo lieutenants with pockets full of proxies, decided to leave selection of the California delegation to President Roosevelt and forestalled any expression of policy.

EPIC leaders predicted today the 600 convention delegates, in addition to naming a Democratic delegation, would adopt vigorous resolutions favoring production-for-use for the unemployed as a national platform plank.

The plan has been fostered by Sinclair, a former Socialist.

Army 'Pep' Rally.

Major Harry L. Purdum has arranged a "pep" rally for Salvation Army corps cadets Wednesday night at the Salvation Army Temple, 606 E street northwest. Refreshments will be served. Members of the different corps will present skits illustrating Salvation Army activities. There will also be talks by Adj. Henry Wilkins and by Maj. and Mrs. Harry L. Purdum.

Address on Sweden.

An address on "Sweden" will be given by Arthur Peterson before a meeting of the Wanderlust Travel Club Tuesday night at the home of Miss Eileen Robinson, 5302 Eighth street northwest. The meeting will be open to the public.

marchers that encamped near the Capitol when agitation for immediate payment reached an impassioned peak near the end of the Hoover Administration.

Apart from the bonus, the Government already has paid out more than $7,000,000,000 for pensions, hospital and medical care, and other service to veterans.

Throughout 17 years it has been an issue, every President has taken a flat stand against bonus prepayment. President Roosevelt, himself, has vetoed one bonus bill and frequently has spoken forthrightly against immediate settlement, but of late he has been silent. Whether he will veto the present measure has been open to speculation in recent weeks. Leaders admit having tried to win his approval, and boldly predict passage over a veto.

Hastings Cites Record.

Citing the President's bonus record and his demand for passage of an economy act not only slashing Federal salaries but reducing veterans' benefits, Senator Hastings told the Senate yesterday:

"I want to know why the country does not know where the President stands on this issue. No one can read his veto message of last May without believing beyond all question that he is opposed to it. Yet, on this floor, I find the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Harrison (Democrat), Mississippi, intimating that this bill might be satisfactory to the President."

Hastings hooted at suggestions by Harrison and Byrnes that a great bloc of veterans will not cash their bonds but will hold them for interest.

"I am very much afraid that what we are doing here will tend to reduce the value of all Government bonds," he said. "I don't know but what a day might come when the Government may have to repudiate all of its bonds. I know if I were a veteran, and I believe others will think that way, I would cash these bonds."

In advancing his inflation proposal, Senator Thomas assailed the coalition (Harrison-Byrnes-Clark-Steiwer) bond-payment measure as a "terrifically unfair, unjust and burdensome bill." Through increased gratuities, it actually pays four bonuses instead of one he asserted, declaring that it will bring "bond inflation" as opposed to the currency expansion charged against his own substitute.

The bill, now heading rapidly toward final disposition, would pay the bonus in negotiable bonds in multiples of $50, which he could cash immediately at postoffices, or draw 3 per cent interest on them after June 15, 1937. Unpaid interest owed by the veterans on bonus borrowings would be cancelled as of September 30, 1931.

preservation of fertility, and not merely erosion control."

Secretary Wallace stated that he believed "public opinion would not tolerate" the refund to manufacturers of $1,000,000,000 paid in AAA processing taxes. He said both the $1,000,000,000 collected and the $2,000,000,000 impounded in court action should be held in the same status, and that the public would be "gravely concerned" over attempts of manufacturers to get the money back. He pointed out that these taxes were passed on to the consumer by processing firms.

This comment was directed at the Supreme Court's decision in the Louisiana rice millers' case, which has been interpreted as requiring the return of the impounded $200,000,000.

Carrying out predictions made that the Administration strategy probably would be to amend the Soil Conservation Act's Civil Service clause to allow the transfer bodily of the AAA organization into the Soil Conservation Service, the Secretary declared yesterday that the AAA organization in the field would be ideal to handle the new farm program. He said further that the agency's personnel probably would deal with the soil conservation and soil fertility angles, while the Soil Conservation Service itself would handle erosion control.

The Secretary directed newsmen's attention to a departmental survey which classed land in four grades as to the degree of slope and the danger of erosion, A, B, C and D. A and B slopes can be cultivated without serious danger of erosion. The Secretary said that 35,000,000 acres now planted in corn, wheat and cotton are on C and D slopes, where erosion is constant and seriously damaging, and that such slopes should be planted with grass or trees.

This was in the sense of wind and water erosion, however, as contrasted with the President's distinction of Friday when he added destruction of soil fertility by continued careless planting of one crop over a period of years to the erosion list.

The Secretary added that foreign purchasing power must be built up, a belief he often has stated, and insisted that today there is no market for the products of about 50,000,000 acres of the Nation's commercial crop land.

He predicted reduction of the amount of corn loans from the 1935 crop, now at 45 cents a bushel, stating that without production control corn loans could not be continued indefinitely and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation probably would demand such a reduction.

Postal Official Bars G. O. P. Comic Stamps

Cartoons Held Unmailable as Reflection on Ideals of President.

By the Associated Press.

Three of the cartoon stamps issued by a New York Republican group, but repudiated by the Republican national committee, were banned as "unmailable" yesterday in an opinion by Solicitor Carl A. Crowley, of the Postoffice Department.

Crowley described the banned stickers as showing:

President Roosevelt as "Frankenstein"—"an astonished and frightened individual bearing an intended resemblance to the President observing a giant labeled 'Bureaucratic Government,' dressed in Russian costume, treading upon industrial plants labeled 'United States Business.'"

Two Stamps Passed.

"The President flippantly lighting a cigarette from a taper composed of a scroll labeled 'Constitution of the United States.'"

"The President and Mrs. Roosevelt seated on the Democratic donkey at the very edge of a precipice, * * * both portrayed as laughing while the former holds before him a megaphone and Mrs. Roosevelt holds aloft a communistic banner."

Two other stamps, also stuck on letters presented for mailing at the New York postoffice, were passed as mailable "as they relate solely to abstractions."

Crowley cited a law barring from envelopes "delineations, epithets, terms or language" which are "intended to reflect injuriously upon the character or conduct of another."

"The stickers * * * fall within the prohibition * * * in that they attribute to the President certain impeachable actions and unpraiseworthy attitude, as well as lack of foresight, i. e., things contributing in no small measure to one's character," Crowley ruled.

Reflection on Character.

"To be likened to 'Frankenstein' as a creator of something maleficent certainly reflects no credit upon one's character. * * *

"To intimate that one sworn to uphold the Constitution holds that obligation so lightly as nonchalantly to employ its destruction as a means to facilitate the procurement of the slight personal pleasure to be derived from the smoking of a cigarette, is to reflect upon one's morality and mentality, and therefore upon his character."

"The postage stamp placed on a letter is to pay for the handling and delivery of a letter and not for the publication and dissemination of personal views and propaganda," he concluded, "and when such are indulged in to the extent of reflecting injuriously upon the character or conduct of another, the postal service must treat the matter as unmailable and decline to carry it."

Baby's Parentage Upheld by Judge

Justice Jesse C. Adkins, in the District Supreme Court, in an oral opinion, yesterday ruled that 13-month-old James B. Kessler, whose paternity was disputed by James Brooke Kessler, its father, was in fact his child and should be supported by the father.

The decision came about in a suit for divorce between the Kesslers, in which Mrs. Lois E. Kessler, the wife, sought a blood test to determine the child's paternity. Two physicians made the test and their report was substantially that the child was one of a large group of "blood types" and was included in the same class as its father.

The Kesslers parted in 1934. In his announcement Justice Adkins said he would grant the husband a divorce.

Bandit Chief, Free, Tracks Down Band

Manila, Jan. 18 (AP).—An erstwhile bandit chief, temporarily free on his honor, went into the hills tonight to round up the remnants of his once powerful robber band for punishment.

With a small army after him and a $5,000 price on his head, the bandit, Nicholas Encallado, surrendered yesterday through negotiations carried on by his daughter, Aurelia.

President Manuel Quezon immediately released him on his promise to find what remains of his outlaw band, accused of killing 11 persons. Encallado was told to surrender his seven followers, including his three sons, and face sedition charges himself.

Kagawa Tells D. C. Audience War Impossible

99 Per Cent of Japanese Would Not Fight, He Says Citing Trade Relations.

The Japanese people—at least 99 per cent of them—do not want war and they will not fight the United States!

Such was the assurance of Dr. Toyohiko Kagawa, frequently called the "Gandhi of Japan," as he began a two-day visit here yesterday. In the few moments between a round of introductions and a luncheon reception awaiting him at the Mayflower Hotel, the man who rose from Japanese slums to become one of the world's most widely known Christian leaders, found time to dispose of the possibilities of American-Japanese conflict.

His open right hand shot downward as he said energetically:

"No, no. It is impossible.

"Ninety-nine per cent want peace. As for the other 1 per cent—they are like the lone mosquito that would keep you awake all night."

Chief among the trouble-makers, Dr. Kagawa said, was a fiction writer. He dreamed about a war between Japan and the United States, and he wrote a book about it.

Economic Reasons.

"But my country then passed a law—that anyone who spoke, or wrote, about a war with America should be punished." The Japanese visitor reflected a moment before adding: "I wish your country would pass that same kind of a law.

"I see you Americans do not understand the psychology of the Japanese very well. We will not fight you—atle ast as long as you are our best customers. Don't you know that if war was declared between our countries, every Japanese silk farmer would suffer? Don't you knoww e depend on New York for much of our prosperity?"

And there Kagawa, who pronounces the name with the accent on the first part (kogg'-a-wa), hit upon what he thinks is the vital issue in thepr oblem of international peace. He has worked out a system of world-wide co-operatives, because he feels that peace is to be found through world trade.

"You probably wonder why Japan walked out of the London disarmament conference. It is because we rufuse to tal about the diameter of guns before we reach agreements about something more fundamental —economic enterprise. All the reasons for war today are economic—nations need raw materials, loans, commercial pursuits. Until those problems are settled, we cannot have peace."

The diminutive, 45-year-old Japanese smiled behind his shell-rimmed glasses.

On Lecture Tour.

"Here I am talking about war. I come ot this country—on six months' visit—I hoped to study. I want to know about social economics in the United States. And I am doing all the talking—lectures every day since I am here."

Kagawa's lecturing, arranged by the Federation of Churches in Washington, began yesterday morning at the American University. He addressed a student convocation. Then he addressed 1,000 churchmen at a noon luncheon in his honor. Afterward he spoke at a forum for ministers. And last night he discussed his "Consumers' Co-operatives" at a public meeting in Luther Place Memorial Church.

These gatherings kept him so busy he nearly missed a 20-minute press conference that had been included in his day's schedule.

At the noon luncheon District Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen in an address of welcome offered the distinguished visitor the keys to the Capital. But there will be little opportunity to use them. Today he has more speaking engagements." At 3 p. m. there will be a mass meeting in Calvary Baptist Church, and at 8 p. m. he will address a young people's rally in the same auditorium.

Then he continues his tour. A swing through the Southern States has just been completed. Now comes a trip into the Northern States. And he will continue to lecture, just as he is in Washington, his itinerary director, C. C. Cunningham, of Kansas City, said.

Welcomed By States.

Before entering the luncheon hall yesterday Kagawa met Japan's ambassador to the United States, Hirosi Saito, who accompanied him to the speakers' table.

There was a demonstration as Kagawa rose to speak. He waited, rather impatiently, for silence, and began his speech with:

"I deserve no reception in this mansion—I belong in the slums, really."

Those who had read his books on social welfare recalled that as a young man Kagawa had been stricken with tuberculosis. He was told he had three months to live. Convinced he had a mission, he went into the slums to do whatever good he could in those three months.

He didn't die. But he did contract there the eye disease which nearly cost him admittance to this country a few weeks ago. Entering by special permission of this Government, Kawaga travels under the care of a physician—a woman who was formerly a missionary in China.

Kagawa's "co-operative" movement, which would revolutionize our processes of distribution, is based, he says, on the philosophy of Jesus Christ—that men love one another. He is not a Communist—he insists on private property and freedom of individual enterprise. But man's relationships must be motivated by the "brotherhood of man" doctrine set down by Christ.

Already, he declared, 5,000,000 families benefit from co-operatives in 20 of the population belongs to such fesuan. In England there are 6,000,000, and in Denmark 70 per cent organizations.

"If only the co-operatives can get a start in other countries—then there will be no war.' For there will be no economic reasons for one."

District Gas Firms Seek Law For Merger, Finance Changes

Authority to change the present restricted capital structure and formally to merge the Washington and Georgetown gas companies will be sought of Congress this session, the companies informed the Public Utilities Commission yesterday.

The companies have been laboring several years under the burden of borrowed capital and are confronted with the necessity of large refinancing arrangements. In all practical matters the two companies are one, inasmuch as the Washington company owns the Georgetown firm. Nonetheless, the two, under the law, must remain separate corporations.

Sotck of the Washington company is limited to the outstanding 130.000 shares of common stock, par value $20, which sell on the market at about $60. Against this capitalization of $2,600,000 the companies have outstanding $16,199,500 in interest-bearing bonds. Interest on these bonds amounts to $852,815 a year. Last December 31 the companies had bank loans amounting to $700,000, on which the interest was $42,000 a year.

Costs of these bonds and loans are lodged against the consumers, it is pointed out, inasmuch as the items are charged as a cost of business to be deducted before any consideration can be given to earnings of the company with an eye to reducing its rates.

The companies propose to seek in Congress a bill authorizing merger of the two companies and release from restrictions on capitalization. The aim is to substitute invested capital, that is, that of stockholders, for borrowed capital, that is financed by banks and bondholders.

Riley E. Elgen, chairman, Richmond B. Keech, vice chairman, Col. Dan I. Sultan, engineer commissioner, members of the commission and William A. Roberts, People's counsel, refused to approve the company proposal until they had seen it in its final form. All are known to be in favor of what the company calls a "new deal." It was a desire to bring about favorable public consideration of this new financial arrangement which was the final persuasive in the recent negotiations by which the company entered a sliding scale agreement with immediate reduction in gas rates.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Friday Morning Music Club presents Willa Semple, pianist; Hazel Gibson Wood, soprano; Grace Powell, violinist, and Vera Neely Ross, contralto. Program: Sonata in A Major (Schubert), Waltz in A Major (Chopin), Suite for violin (Purcell), Arias by Mozart, Handel and Massenet; Songs by Hahn, German, Scarlatti, Grieg, Chausson, MacDowell and Lang.

My penchant for neglected music being virtually a hunger, I enjoyed particularly the Purcell, Handel and Schubert items in this program; and found satisfaction, as well, in the reappearance of Edward MacDowell's fine song, "The Sea," and its interesting companion, Rudolph Lang's "The Sea Hath its Pearls." As for the remainder of the euphony, I had some difficulty in keeping it from going, as the saying is, in one ear and out the other, following the smooth groove of familiarity.

Henry Purcell, who died when Bach was a lad of ten, has long been paid homage by historians as the effulgent figure in early English music; but it is only of late years that his works have been actually performed. There is hope he will soon become more than a name to the average listener. His writing has much more than an antiquarian interest; it is fresh and vital, and has an idiom quite its own.

In the suite which Miss Powell played, with Lyman McCrary at the piano, one notes a charming naivete in odd combination with scholarly harmonic skill. The "ayres" are unmistakably English, with a faint echo of the Italianate in the treatment. But one could not for a moment feel other than the sturdy British spirit in the music.

Just why the sonatas of Schubert are so seldom brought to the concert stage is a mystery. They are not great works, but they repay hearing because they contain elements of Schubert's nature which show elsewhere only in his symphonies. Miss Semple gave us the thoughtful one in A major, full of poetic intimations. And to Vera Neely Ross my thanks for the aria from Handel's "Radamisto," a noble and rewarding melody in the grand manner.

King May Fight Juvenile Court Extension Bill

Senator Opposed to Taking Too Much Authority From Parents.

Senator William H. King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, yesterday indicated he would oppose any move to broaden the authority of the District Juvenile Court unless effective safeguards are provided.

While explaining he had not had an opportunity to examine closely the bill introduced Friday by Chairman Mary T. Norton of the House District Committee, he said:

"I would have to study the matter very carefully before I would agree to any plan to increase the powers of the District Juvenile Court.

"I am opposed to have parental authority supplanted by judicial power. The tendency over the country has been to grant too much authority to juvenile courts."

Senator King was one of those who opposed the confirmation of Fay Bentley as judge of the District Juvenile Court.

He said yesterday he would take no part in the controversy that is developing over the Norton bill until it comes before the Senate District committee. Before that time a full hearing will be allowed by the House District committee.

The measure, which is sponsored by the National League of Women Voters and indorsed by the District Bar Association, is designed to change the character of the juvenile court from a criminal to an equity tribunal.

Senator King plans to call an executive meeting of the Senate District committee sometime this week to decide whether public hearings are to be held in compliance with the demands for an investigation of pro-communistic textbooks in Washington public schools.

The probe has been urged by the Federation of Citizens Associations and the Public School Association.

Bible and Sardines Nemeses of Virginian

A Bible, sardines, a clock and silver communion service caused the undoing of Andrew Swann, colored, of Chesterbrook, Va. Tomorrow he will face the Circuit Court of Fairfax County to answer for his sins.

Fairfax police charge Swann with entering a store, taking sardines and cigarettes, entering the Chesterbrook Colored Church, taking the Bible and silver service, and entering the school and taking a clock.

Deputy Sheriff Henry Magarity and Policeman Carl McIntosh, investigating the robbery, went to Swann's house, where they found him asleep in bed with the missing articles beside him. County Trial Justice A. C. Rithie, hearing the case, held Swann for the action of the grand jury.

Mrs. Longcope Released As Guardian of Estate

Santa Barbara, Calif., Jan. 18 (AP).—Mrs. Dorothea Longcope was released today in Superior Court from a bond under which she held special guardianship over the estate of her younger son, Paul Livermore.

Mrs. Longcope, divorced wife of Jesse Livermore, New York stock operator, assertedly shot and seriously wounded her other son, Jesse, jr., last Thanksgiving Day. He is recovering satisfactorily, physicians said.

Paul Livermore now is with his father and the latter's third wife in South America.

Shift Planned In Solicitation By Chest Group

Perfection of Organization Should Be Developed, Says R. P. Miller.

With plans to change its organization, the group solicitation unit of the Community Chest yesterday began preparation for next year's campaign, which is approximately 10 months off.

Perfection of its organization rather than an expansion of activities should be developed, Richard P. Miller, secretary of the unit, said in a report to Herbert L. Willett, jr., director of the Chest.

"Although the group solicitation unit raised 12 per cent more funds in the 1936 campaign than was raised in the previous year, the unit has not as yet shown its real strength," the secretary said.

The group considered the advisability of establishing four divisions with four divisional chairmen within each of the four geographical sections of the city. Each division would consist of five sections and each section would embrace no more than eight business establishments.

This plan of organization would more equally divide the work, and at the same time make possible closer supervision, Miller pointed out. Last year there were twelve firms in each of the sections.

Unit chairmen, who are headed by John Poole, general chairman, will discuss the plan further at meetings in the near future. John L. Vandergrift is vice chairman of the unit, and Harold A. Brooks, Nelson B. O'Neill, Robert B. Swope and James C. Wilkes are area chairmen.

Jackson Fete Nets $275,000 To Democrats

Plans Are Formulated to Accommodate 15,000 at Convention.

Preliminary arrangements for the Democratic national convention in Philadelphia June 23, calling for auditorium accommodations for 15,000, and a round of festivities ranging from mummers' parades to big league baseball, were announced last night in a radio address by W. Forbes Morgan, secretary of the Democratic national committee.

Earlier, Morgan disclosed $275,000 would be turned into the Democratic campaign fund from the Nation-wide Jackson Day dinners with plates ranging up to the $50 at the central gathering here. Proceeds will be used to help wipe out the party's $401,000 deficit. Cash receipts already have reached $143,469, of which $25,000 was used to pay the party's last installment on its debt to John J. Raskob, former committee chairman. He previously had estimated that $225,000 would be realized from the dinners.

Liberty Bell Symbol.

Col. Edwin A. Halsey, secretary of the Senate, will serve as sergeant at arms at the Philadelphia convention, Morgan announced, but a committee on arrangements has yet to be appointed by Postmaster General Farley.

Morgan announced the Liberty bell as the convention "symbol and insignia," called on State delegations to bring their "bands and drum corps and their finest singers," and disclosed plans for the mummers' parade, water sports on the Schuylkill River, a golf tournament and a round of dramatics.

"We are going to Philadelphia this year in a happy frame of mind, confident that the hard years are behind us, and cheered by the prospects of what lies ahead," said Morgan. "We like music."

While the Democrats were enthusiastically planning their convention, the Republicans were not altogether idle.

Former Simeon D. Fess, of Ohio, and once Republican national chairman, called for a pronounced anti-New Dealer to lead the party as its Presidential nominee. Fess, visiting on Capitol Hill, predicted that a "dark horse" would be selected, with some of those now prominently mentioned being shunted aside for a more outspoken opponent of the Administration's policies.

New Deal Crucial Issue.

"here can be no compromise on the New Deal," he told the Associated Press. "he New Deal is a philosophy and not a policy and the next campaign will be fought be-New Dealers and anti-New Dealers. Any candidate who is willing to compromise with this new philosophy will not qualify for the Republican nomination."

Meanwhile, Representative Martin (Republican), of Massachusetts, taunted the Democrats to call an election to name a successor to the late Representative Wesley Lloyd, of the Sixth Washington District. Lloyd was a Democrat, as is the Washington Governor, Clarence D. Martin.

Be Massachusetts Representative gave a "change in sentiment" among the voters as a reason for the Republicans' desire for an election.

Drowned Child, Must Die

MRS. DOROTHY SHERWOOD.

Mrs. Sherwood Guilty; To Die As Son's Slayer

Jury Dooms Widow, 27, for Drowning Boy 'to Balk Starvation.'

By the United Press.

Newburgh, N. Y., Jan. 18.—Mrs. Dorothy Sherwood, comely 27-year-old former show girl who drowned her 2-year-old son "rather than see him starve," was convicted of first-degree murder late today.

The verdict makes the death penalty mandatory.

The child was killed last August. Mrs. Sherwood, who was portrayed as a "tippler" by her landlady, readily confessed. Her husband, a laborer, died leaving her without funds to care for the child, she said.

She drowned him while bathing him by holding his head under the water.

The prosecution demanded the extreme penalty and supported its contention the murder was premeditated by calling witnesses, including the landlady, who testified the pretty brunette usually had money.

The jury received the case at 10:45 a. m. and reported at 3:45 p. m.

Mrs. Sherwood appeared calm, but matrons who hurried her from the courtroom said she was near collapse.

Sentence will be imposed next week by Judge L. D. Wilson, who said only action by the Governor or an appeal to higher courts can save the widow from the electric chair.

Mrs. Sherwood pleaded temporary insanity. She said a friend won her trust with promises of marriage and that her whole world collapsed when he deserted her.

"I couldn't think—I didn't know what to do," she said.

She tried to find work, she testified, and, penniless, was threatened with dispossession by her landlady. To insure her son against a drab life, she decided to drown him, she declared.

Ritchie Rallies Bar to Battle New Deal 'Isms'

Ex-Governor Urges Lawyer to Return American Form of Government.

By the Associated Press.

Toledo, Ohio, Jan. 18.—Albert C. Ritchie, former Democratic Governor of Maryland and an outspoken critic of the New Deal, today called on the "American lawyer" to give protection to the "kind of government we call American."

In an address before the Ohio State Bar Association here, Ritchie said "you assemble at a time when the kind of government we call American has need for the experience, the understanding and, I believe, the protection of the American lawyer.

"The American lawyer cannot ignore his heritage of governmental as well as juristic leadership. By every right of tradition and actuality, he is guardian of the foundations of the American Government. And there is need for him now to assert that guardianship."

"The emergency is passing . . . ," he said. "And now the country is being asked to accept the New Deal, not as a temporary and curative thing any longer, but as the permanent and all-time policy of the American Government.

"What we should do is calmly and dispassionately take the New Deal apart * * * and see what the effect of adopting it in its various parts will in all probability be.

"When we do that we find that some parts of it are good, and in accord with American institutions. We find that other parts are or probably are in accord * * * but are unwisely administered. As to these we should substitute wisdom for lack of wisdom.

"The political problem of the ages has always been how to reconcile the powers of government with the liberties of the individual. Through the centuries, government in the end generally crushed liberty. After a while, the people generally arose, overthrew the prevailing government and set up their own.

"We cannot have unity in national affairs unless the people of the States are free to settle for themselves their domestic affairs," Ritchie said. "Nor can liberty be secure unless the legislative, executive and judicial departments of government are kept distinct. If they are permitted to be merged, then we are back again to the old order where the people had no control or check upon government in the exercise of its powers.

"You have a kind of government which is American no more. It may be fascism or communism or socialism or collectivism, or something else * * * ."

Keogh Death to Be Asked.

Chicago, Jan. 18 (AP).—The death penalty, prosecutors said today, would be demanded for John W. Keogh, 63, real estate operator, who shot Attorney Christopher Kinney to death Monday in Judge John Prystalski's court, after losing a $250,000 mortgage judgment.

A criminal court jury yesterday found Keogh was sane. His trial date has not yet been set.

Swimming Pools, Playgrounds and Gardens Are Planned to Replace This Government Property Yard

The District property yard at South Capitol between G and I streets, which will be supplanted, playground officials announced yesterday, by a network of swimming pools, playgrounds and gardens. The yard is now filled with concrete manhole tops, iron pipes, wire mesh used in roadways and other equipment. An even more unsightly adjoining property, which is also scheduled for reclammation, is the depository for the rusty remains of all the automobiles which have fallen into police hands. The site is just north of the Army War College.

Southwest D. C. Will Get Pools And Play Spots

Extensive Development Set to Transform Unsightly Public Properties.

Development of extensive playgrounds, swimming pools and gardens on Government-owned properties in the Southwest section of the city is planned by parks and playgrounds officials, it was learned yesterday.

The whole project is expected to extend from south of the railroad tracks, which cross South Capitol street at F street, south to the District reduction plant, just north of the Army War College.

Parks and playgrounds officials expect the development to do much to transform the neighborhood.

At present the District-owned property immediately south of the railroad tracks is used by the police for the storage of vehicles which have fallen into official hands. Exposed to the weather and often stripped of all parts worth while, the outlay is not a beautiful sight.

Another Nearby.

Immediately south of this lot is the District property yard, where is kept material for road work, such as concrete, manhole tops, iron pipes and wire mesh used in roadways and like projects.

Police have been told to look around for another storage place for dilapidated cars. The property yard and its materials are to be transferred to property adjacent to Mount Olivet Cemetery, on Bladensburg road.

Nine Government-owned properties, commonly referred to as the Canal street reservations, which for years have been under the nominal control of Congress through its library committee, recently were transferred to the parks office, which is under direction of C. Marshall Finnan.

2 Other Projects Planned.

The plans call for extension of the Cardozo Playgrounds adjacent to the Randall Junior High School for colored children and for extension of the Hoover Playgrounds, several blocks to the south, for white children.

Finnan said several of the reservations which have been given to his office to administer are to be made into garden plots for the raising of vegetables and foodstuffs for the residents of the section.

Some of the property will not be susceptible to treatment as swimming pools because it is ground which has been built upon the tunnel through which the old James Creek canal still runs underground.

Union Fight Halts New Sewage Plant

Jurisdictional dispute between the iron workers and millwrights of the carpenters' union yesterday brought to a halt work on the District sewage disposal plant at Blue Plains.

The fight had been simmering for some time. Work had been continued under appeals of District officials that it should not be delayed by what might seem to be mere bickering between unions.

Col. Dan. I. Sultan, engineer commissioner, yesterday appealed to the Department of Labor, asking that Howard T. Colvin, regarded as ace conciliator of the department, be assigned to the task to bring about an end to the dispute.

Col Sultan said he did not care which union won out, but he wanted the work to go ahead. The strike was called Friday. Work stopped yesterday. Conferences are to be called tomorrow to seek to iron out the difficulty.

Auto Deaths Dropping, Commerce Data Shows

Automobile deaths are dropping off. The Commerce Department said yesterday deaths in 86 principal cities in the first two weeks of this year numbered 348 compared with 424 in the corresponding period of 1935, according to the Associated Press.

For the week ended January 11, New York led all major cities with 12 deaths compared with 16 the previous week. Records of other cities: Los Angeles 15 against 10; Chicago 8 against 10, and Philadelphia 7 against 8.

House Committee To Check Traffic

Just what the special House sub-committee will look for on its tour of Washington Tuesday morning as a traffic survey is launched was a matter of conjecture yesterday.

Chairman Carpenter (Democrat), of Kansas, said the sub-committee will just look around a bit before deciding whether to hold public hearings.

"We don't want any brass bands accompanying us," he said, "or any flag waving. We just want to ride around like any other motorists and see what's going on."

Other members of the sub-committee are Representatives Wood (Democrat), of Missouri; Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana; Short (Republican), of Missouri, and Fenerty (Republican), of Pennsylvania.

Citizens Urge Further Study Of Crime Plan

Jelleff and Lodge Uncertain Capital Needs Proposed Commission.

Thorough study should precede the establishment of a District crime commission, two local civic leaders said yesterday in commenting upon the proposal, which was discussed Thursday night at the Hotel Mayflower dinner meeting arranged by a citizens committee.

Frank R. Jelleff, a member of the parole board, and Thomas E. Lodge, president of the Federation of Citizens' Association, declared they plan to go into the question more deeply before deciding whether to advocate or oppose the commission plan.

Mrs. G. Madden Grimes, D. C. regent of the D. A. R., said she is firmly convinced the proposal should be adopted. Mrs. Grimes, Jelleff and Lodge were members of the citizens' committee of 51 which arranged the dinner meeting to hear Newton D. Baker, Justin Miller and James M. Hepron outline the activities of a crime commission.

"Although I attended the recent Mayflower dinner and heard the matter of establishment of a criminal justice commission discussed, I am not familiar enough at present with the criminal situation in Washington to say whether or not I believe that usch a commission is necessary or advisable for Washington," said Jelleff.

"The statistics read by Mr. Hepbron of Baltimore (managing director, Baltimore Criminal Justice Commission), made Washington look bad by comparison but I have never felt in all my 25 years residence here that Washington was a graft-ridden city.

"As usual, it seemed to me that the speakers quote unusual and extraordinarily bad situations that had arisen in certain parole cases and did not give the parole system credit for its many good results. I am therefore disposed to study other phases of the proposed work of a criminal justice commission before expressing a decided opinion either for or against.

"From the casual observation of a business man, I think that the metropolitan police of Washington are to be greatly commended."

Lodge said he has held several conferences with persons from cities which have crime commissions but "I have not made up my mind yet."

"For one thing," he asserted, "I want to make further comparisons of crime figures in Baltimore and Cleveland, the two largest cities having commissions, with those of Washington. I intend to study the matter carefully and I trust similar investigation will be undertaken on a general scale."

Pickpocket Gets $130.

Arthur S. Brown, of 1420 Shepherd street northwest was robbed by a pickpocket of his billfold containing $130 in cash, while he was watching the boxing matches at Catholic University last night.

Citizens Reject Subway Study For Washingto

Federation So Opposed to Tube It Refuses to Consider Survey.

The Federation of Citizens Association last night voted against subways for the District after a somewhat caustic debate in the course of which the delegates refused even to approve a study of the practicability of subways.

The question was raised by a resolution from the Southwest Citizens Association which endorsed a proposed $25,000 appropriation for the study of the subject.

William McK. Clayton, chairman of the public utilities committee, said he was opposed to subways at this time. Later Clayton said even if he was opposed to subways at this time it might be well to have a study of the subject made. But by that time he was something like a leader of a lost cause.

The proposed study, said James G. Yaden, was just a scheme to waste $25,000 to $50,000. Subways would have to be constructed under Pennsylvania avenue, he said. That meant running into sub-surface water. The Department of Commerce had to keep a pump going to keep water from flooding it. It would cost from $10,000,000 to $12,000,000 to construct the necessary four to five miles of subways. Cities which had gone in for subways were groaning under bonded indebtedness, he added.

Lodge Opposed.

Thomas E. Lodge, president of the federation, left the chair to side with Yoden. Subways, he said, were not practicable for Washington because they would run into the difficulties incident to the gas, electric, water and sewer lines. Subways would have to be run to Petworth, to Georgetown and to Chevy Chase, he said.

John Saul said the wide streets of the city made subways unnecessary. L. A. Carruthers said there was justification for subways. An investigation would be like the Virginia-District boundary commission activity, he said.

Fred S. Walker said there was plenty of room on the streets for traffic and he not only was opposed to subways, but also was opposed to what he termed free garages. George E. Sullivan said there was "one office" of the District insisting on the subway. He referred to William A. Roberts, people's counsel.

Joseph L. Gammell said Roberts was correct in his advocacy. Harry S. Wender said the resolution of his association did not contemplate construction, but a study of the cost of subways and denied there was room on the streets for all traffic. B. W. Payne and Mrs. Marie Flynn Maddox suggested the Federal Government, in view of its responsibility for congestion, might pay the cost. M. M. McLean opposed the idea.

Col. Peak Indorsed.

Appointment of Col. William L. Peak to be superintendent of District penal institutions was urged in another resolution adopted. Col. Peak was not named in the resolution, but they said that District jobs should be given to District residents and a District resident should be made superintendent of penal institutions. Col. Peak is the only District resident in the running for the job, appointment to which the board of public welfare has recommended Harold E. Donnell, Maryland State superintendent of prisons.

Enactment of a taxicab liability law, reduction fothe initial rate of return of the Potomac Electric Power Co. to 6 per cent, provision for a staff for the People's Counsel, including an accountant, a secretary, and others at an estimated cost of $8,640, increased funds for the District Health Department, construction of a small courts building, amendment of the minors employment law so as to permit public appearance of children at paid performances under limited conditions, was voted by the Federation.

Jesse C. Suter was voted down when he proposed changes in the Constitution. He proposed the annual meeting be changed from November to May. He proposed that formal nominations for officers must be made a month in advance. He proposed that terms of delegates expire in May. All his proposals were voted down.

Irish War Veterans Will Stage First 'Real' St. Patrick's Parade

Washington this year will witness its first true St. Patrick's Day parade, for on March 17 a newly formed organization, the Irish War Veterans of Washington, plan an all-Irish parade to honor the patron saint of Erin.

The veterans, organized last October, are affiliated with the Irish War Veterans of America, founded in Newark, N. J., in 1932. Only those of Irish blood who have fought in America's wars are allowed to join the organization.

A huge green banner with the shamrock and harp is to be the group's flag. Green stationery and green ink will be used for official correspondence.

Headed by Edward J. McGory, temporary commander, and Lieut. George H. E. Prendergast, adjutant, the veterans have enrolled 600 men.

Maj. Brown on Traffic Cruise Leads Chase After Wild Driver

Police Chief Gets a First-Hand Idea of Recklessness and Hairbreadth Escapes of Capital Motorists; One Drives Another Over Curb.

(Editor's note: In an effort to determine the answer to Washington's present traffic problem, with its mounting toll of accidens, The Post has assigned a reporter to learn the reason behind violations of traffic regulations. Ae reporter, accompanied by an official of the Police Traffic Division, is cruising in a police car. Motorists who violate the law are stopped. Their side of the story is recorded. It is The Post's desire merely to learn "the reason why" of violations. This is the ninth in a series of stories.)

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Wanton recklessness, hair-breadth escapes from injury or possible death, negligent drivers turning slippery, rain-soaked thoroughfares into hazardous speedways, wilfull infractions of every known traffic law—we saw all this on Washington streets last night.

It was our first "after dark" cruise in search of the "reason why" behind violations of traffic regulations. A steady drizzle had set in when we left police headquarters with Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, at the wheel of a high-powered cruiser. He was acting as "observer" while Policeman C. L. Smith, traffic division, kept tabs on the violations. Half a dozen fool-hardy motorists, risking life and limb to gain a minute, were arrested. There were nearly a dozen others who received "tickets."

Saturday night traffic was heavy along Rhode Island avenue northeast. We were cruising slowly near the District line. Suddenly, as we watched through the mist nad rain, an automobile without lights sped from a side street.

Forces Car Over Curb.

The driver was bending low over the steering wheel. He careened into the center of the street. By inches the racing machine avoided collision. Another car, also ahead of us, swerved to the right and was forced across the curb and onto the lawn of a filling station.

The man behind the wheel of the careening machine followed his prey across the law, zig-zagged through the filling station and started to flee down a side street. Maj. Brown started in pursuit. Policeman Smith opened the cruiser door ready to jump. In the back seat we just hung on.

Down the side street we raced. The speeding demon (and we all agreed he was just that) was finally forced to stop. In addition to driving without lights, nearly killing two innocent persons in the other car and racing at high speed on slippery streets, the offending driver admitted he had no brakes on the car.

"I thought they would work—but they didn't. Please, officer, give me a break," whined the prisoner.

Admits Drinking.

He said he "didn't know what he had done to be arrested." He admitted he had been drinking beer. But he was not drunk enough to accuse of drunken driving, so he was charged with reckless driving and thrown into a cell at the Twelfth Police Precinct statino.

The man at the wheel of the other cor was pale with fright. A woman passenger almost fainted. Yet the traffic violator "wanted a break." His car bore Maryland tags.

We had hardly left the precinct station when another Maryland car passed, roaring down the avenue. We gave chase. The driver was a Baltimore student—about 20 years old. We paced him at 40 miles an hour in a 22 mile zone. Street car tracks were glazed with rain. This driver "didn't know the speed limit" and wanted to be let off "because he didn't have any money." He said the speed limit in Baltimore city was 25 miles per hour.

In spite of hazardous weather conditions, we stopped and "ticketed" many cars with mechanical defects—no lights, no rear lights, only one front light, no windshield wiper.

At Eighth street and Massachusetts avenue northeast, we stopped a motorist who was driving with only one headlight. Policeman Smith told the driver to turn on his windshield wiper.

"It's no use; it don't work," was his quick response. He added that he knew the front light was out.

In Quick Succession.

We were out until late. We witnessed two accidents. One machine was thrown onto the sidewalk at Twelfth and I street snorthwest.

Many other sights were witnessed. Space does not permit their recounting.

Action

Driver Gives Police Plenty of It, but Loses.

Detective Sergeant H. E. (Steve) Brodie lost most of the buttons from his coat yesterday, and James Ellis Robinson, colored, 30, of 400 block I street northwest, lost his freedom for the week-end.

Brodie and his partner, Sergeant Leo Murray, stopped the man at Sixth and D streets northwest for an alleged traffic violation. Robinson resented the fact the detectives asked for his operator's permit, which he didn't have. He put his automobile in gear and sped away.

The detectives commandeered a taxicab, and after a 5-mile chase through the northwest section cornered Robinson in a blind alley near Hanover street northwest. Brodie was forced to use his gun as a club before his captive was subdued. Brodie lost the buttons in the scuffle.

Robinson was charged with driving without a permit, reckless driving and assault.

Allen to Urge Building Heads Get Clean Bill

Commission Will Confer With Two Inspectors Tomorrow.

Final clean bill of official health is to be given by the District Commissioners this week to Col. John W. Oehmann, building inspector, and Capt. Hugh P. Oram, director of inspections.

Commissioner George E. Allen, to whom the other Commissioners assigned the job of investigating charge against the two officials, will confer with Col. Oehmann and Capt. Oram at 2 p. m. tomorrow to go over the remainder of the charges.

Col. Oehmann was publicly exonerated of some of the charges after a public trial by Commissioner Allen and H. Winship Wheatley, president of the District Bar Association. The decision of the board, delivered verbally by Mr. Wheatley, not only exonerated Col. Oehmann but commended him for the official actions which prompted the most serious charges.

Sixteen other charges involving Capt. Oram and Col. Oehmann have been laying around the District Building since. Commissioner Allen has studied them. He has refused to express any opinion. His report to the full board of Commissioners is to be based on his cross-examination of Capt. Oram and Col. Oehmann tomorrow.

The Commissioner is understood to brush the charges aside on several grounds. He is understood to believe they were prompted by a desire for vengeance; that they are in many instances technical; that the sponsors of the charges are unprepared and unwilling to submit whatever proof they may have of the implications inferred.

Complete exoneration of Col. Oehmann is expected to result in some changes in the personnel in the office of the building inspector, inasmuch as some of his subordinates were believed to have been active in fostering the charges.

Ginn Heirlooms Given to Museum; Schneider Estate $144,885.

Petitions for probate of two estates, totalling more than $200,000, were filed yesterday in the District Supreme Court.

Luther R. Ginn, once Assistant Comptroller General of the United States, left an estate valued at more than $76,000 when he died December 13, his will revealed.

All his books and closs personal effects, including a number of paintings, were left to the public library at Middletown, Ind. Most of his Masonic heirlooms are to be placed in a museum maintained by the Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction, in the House of the Temple, Sixteenth and S streets northwest.

His widow, Mrs. Helen M. Ginn, of Indianapolis, Ind., and a sister, Mrs. Sarah D. Crabhill, also of the Indiana capital, are to receive incomes of $100 a month.

When they die the entire income will go to a niece, Mrs. Bernice E. Main, of Maryleville, Ind., until her death, when the income will be received by her daughter, Elizabeth Ann.

The Masonic and Eastern Star Home is named the final beneficiary.

An estate of $144,885 was left by the late George A. Schneider, of 1612 Allison street, who died January 8. Miss Carrie A. Schneider, a sister, who lives at the Allison street address, was bequeathed the income from the estate for life.

Taxicab Outspeeds Police Motorcycle

Motorcycle Policeman E. C. Spaulding said he was going 80 miles an hour yesterday and was being outdistanced by a taxicab on Connecticut avenue northwest!

The mad chase ended at the Chevy Chase Circle when the cab failed to make the turn, smashed into the fountain and overturned. Policeman E. C. Moore, of the Eighth Precinct, patrolling his beat nearby, ran to the scene and arrested Earl Wallace, 28, colored, 1304 R street northwest. An unidenti fied colored passenger fled.

Police said Wallace had "borrowed" the taxi from Anderson Howie, colored, his roommate.

Babcock Tells AAA Workers Jobs Are Safe

Predicts Congress Will 'Take Care' of 1,200 Facing Furlough.

Nearly 1,000 AAA employes, alarmed over their jobs, were reassured last night by speakers at a rally in the Agriculture Department.

E. Claude Babcock, national president of the American Federation of Government Employes, which called the meeting, drew prolonged cheers when he predicted Congress would "take care" of the workers, some 1,200 of whom face furloughs, due to the Supreme Court decision invalidating the AAA.

Chester Davis, AAA administrator, Babcock reported, has been "very helpful" in agreeing to furlough rather than dismiss outright the employes involved.

"I feel certain," Babcock said, "all of you will continue at work under the new farm program, or will be transferred to permanent jobs in other departments."

He emphasized that "a lot can happen on the Hill" before expiration of the 15-day notice period, and before the workers have taken their accumulated annual leave.

Even when the first 30-day furlough period expires, he stated, the furlough can be extended if necessary.

"The ship hasn't sunk," he added, "so don't give up, because this isn't the time to get discouraged."

W. F. Callander, assistant administrator, and John B. Payne, comptroller, told of the desire of AAA officials to help their employes find jobs.

Benjamin Allen, representing a joint committee from the three A. F. G. E. lodges at the AAA, reported on its work in behalf of those whose jobs have been threatened.

Col. Charles I. Stengle, executive assistant to Babcock, encouraged the workers. He praised the "fine leadership" of Babcock in the fight.

Lee's 129th Birth Anniversary Is Observed by Washington

Washington observed Gen. Robert E. Lee's 129th birthday anniversary at two functions yesterday and a third will be held tomorrow night. His birthday is today.

A wreath was deposited at the base of a statute in statuary hall at the Capitol at ceremonies conducted under the auspices of the District Division of the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

Lee was eulogized on his accomplishments as a citizen after the War Between the States by P. D. Gold, member of the Board of Veterans' Appeals.

Dr. Francis P. Gaines, president of Washington and Lee University, last night spoke on the spiritual values of Lee's life at a dinner of the Washington chapter of the University's alumnae association in the Mayflower Hotel. He was introduced by Edmund D. Campbell, chapter president.

Dr. J. W. Claudy, of Bellefont, Pa., national president of the alumnae association, also spoke. Honor guests included Judge Charles D. Mahaffie, Interstate Commorce Commerce Commission chairman; Senator Caraway, of Arkansas, and and Judge Joseph W. Cox, of the District Supreme Court.

Both Lee and Gen. Jonathan (Stonewall) Jackson will be honored at exercises tomorrow night at 8:30 o'clock in Confederate Memorial Hall, 1322 Vermont avenue northwest. Jackson's birthday anniversary was January 19.

The meeting will be sponsosed by the United Confederate Veterans, the sons of Confederate Veterans and the United Daughters of the Confederacy. Judge Albert L. Cox, of Washington and Raleigh, N. C., will speak.

Scantlin, Allen Are Favorites To Be Assessor

D. C. Commissioners Expected to Name One to Succeed Richards.

Out of a behind-the-scenes battle over the job of District assessor, to succeed William P. Richards, there were indications that one or two men would be selected for the post by the Commissioners.

One was Harold D. Scantlin.

The other was Fred Allen.

Both are assistant assessors. Which, if either, will be named, has not been determined the Commissioners. said.

Because the job of District assessor is one so subject to venality, District officials are handling the matter with tender hands. Postmaster General James A. Farley, a Commissioner said, has wiped his hands of the problem of choosing a successor to Mr. Richards, who is to retire on March 12, two days before he reaches the mandatory retirement age of 70 years.

Complimented by Congress.

Retirement of Mr. Richards will leave a void in the District government. It has been upon his shoulders that many projects have rested in the battles between the District and anti-District members of Congress. Despite his unswerving refusal to truckle Mr. Richards won the respect of Congress so deeply that a special law was passed empowering the Commissioners to continue him in office indefinitely.

Mr. Richards said he was getting a little old. He was tired of battling. He appreciated greatly the compliment Congress had paid him but he didn't see much hope for a fair consideration of District problems and tax questions and he believed he should get out. He is going to live with his sister in Delaware. He doesn't want much. He isn't rich. But he still is energetic and after a rest he is going to do some of the things he always wanted to do.

Mr. Scantlin has been in the service of the District for about three years. For a year and a half he was engaged by the public utilities commission in connection with the valuation of the gas companies and the study of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Co.

Aided in Gas Hearing.

Recommendations made by Mr. Scantlin since he has been a deputy assessor have resulted in recovery of thousands of dollars for the District in tax revenues. Having taken him on his permanent staff, Mr. Richards loaned the services of Mr. Scantlin to the public utilities commission during the gas company hearing.

Prior to his coming to the District service Mr. Scantlin was chief valuation engineer of the Southern Railroad, in the service of which he started in 1915. Before that he was a construction engineer. He is a native of Alabama.

Mr. Allen has been regarded as one of the ace assistant assessors of Mr. Richards' office for a number of years. Ruddy-faced, affable and personable, his sponsors have urged that just such a man is needed to do all the things required of the District assessor, especially before Congressional committees.

Others who have been considered for the post include J. Leo Kolb, J. Ninniam Beall, Walter Fowler, E. A. Dent, Howard Jones, Clinton James and others, some of whom, it is understood, declined appointment to the post.

Herbert Samuel Will Be Delegate

The National Conference for Palestine, which convenes February 1, will bring several distinguished British Jews to Washington. In the delegation will be Sir Herbert Samuel, former British home secretary; Lord Bearsted, business leader, and Simon Marks, chain store magnate and philanthropist, who recently announced a $500,000 gift for the Jewish emigrant fund.

The conference is planned as the most representative gathering of Jewry ever held. Delegates from Jewish communities and national Jewish organizations will attend.

A concrete large-scale program for solving the problem of the Jews in Germany, Poland and other European countries will be discussed.

Supreme Court Ruling on TVA Believed Near

Other New Deal Decisions May Be Announced Also Tomorrow.

By the Associated Press.

The Supreme Court presumably scrutinized a variety of New Deal litigation at its secret conference yesterday, stirring speculation that it had completed a final draft of its Tennessee Valley act opinion.

The TVA ruling may determine whether the Government can sell surplus electricity in competition with private utilities. A brief session for announcement of decisions will be held tomorrow before the court takes a two-week recess.

At the Saturday conference, the justices discuss cases that have been argued, vote on decisions, and check drafts of opinions before these are sent to the printer.

Fortnight's Delay Possible.

Arguments on TVA were completed December 19. If it is not decided tomorrow, a ruling would not be possible until February 3, when the court will return from its recess. The justices regularly meet two weeks to hear arguments and then recess for two weeks to prepare opinions.

The Tennessee Valley litigation was brought by stockholders of the Alabama Power Co., who sought to restrain that utility from selling transmission lines to TVA. The Government won in the Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans after an adverse district court ruling.

Other litigation scheduled for consideration yesterday with announcement probable tomorrow included:

A request by the Hoosac Mills Corporation, of Massachusetts that the ruling holding AAA unconstitutional go into effect immediately, instead of allowing the Government the customary 25 days to ask for reconsideration.

Tax Rebate at Once Sought.

A petition by the Louisiana rice millers asking that the decision ordering refund of impounded processing taxes take effect at once, instead of giving the Government 25 days to seek reconsideration.

A Government request that the justices pass on a decision by the Eastern Michigan Federal District Court that the United States cannot condemn land in Detroit for a low-cost housing and slum clearance project. A similar case from Louisville already has been granted a review.

A request to pass on a decision by New York State courts that the Congressional resolution barring payment of obligations in gold applied to transactions between non-residents of the United States. The suit was brought by a Columbia concern against the Finland Bank.

Talmadge Suit on List.

A reply also is expected tomorrow from the Department of Justice to the suit filed by Gov. Eugene Talmadge, of Georgia, challenging constitutionality of the Bankhead cotton act. Talmadge is a critic of the Roosevelt Administration.

The court probably will defer for two weeks decison on whether to pass on the validity of the 1933 securities act, as requested by J. Edward Jones, New York securities dealer. A lower court held the act constitutional and the Government has joined in the request for a review.

Arguments will be heard in March on the Louisville slum clearance case and on the constitutionality of the Guffey act to regulate the soft coal industry.

Store Window Uses New Invisible Glass

The Woodward & Lothrop Department Store has installed new "invisible glass" show windows just east of its F street entrance.

This development in scientific show window construction gives the passerby a much clearer view of the merchandise therein, it was explained yesterday.

The glass is an arrangement of straight and curved surfaces of specially treated glass which removes shadows, reflections and distortions.

It presents no visible barrier between the passerby and the merchandise on display, and is said to be almost uncanny in its invisibility, seeming to take the daylight and direct it to the displays. Windows so constructed require far less illumination than ordinary show windows.

Realtors Support Bill For Mortgage Bank

By the Associated Press.

Officers of the National Association of Real Estate Boards yesterday put their support behind the bill of Senator Fletcher (Democrat), Florida, to create a Federal mortgage bank to stabilize mortgage credit.

At a hearing of a Senate banking subcommittee, Walter S. Schmidt, of Cincinnati, past president of the association, said the bill, if enacted, would "lend patronage to realty values."

Fletcher said a questionnaire sent to real estate leaders on the proposal had resulted in 85 favorable and 35 unfavorable replies.

McCarran's Sacrifice For Bonus Is Futile

By the Associated Press.

Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, got out of a sick bed yesterday to vote for the cash bonus bill and then didn't get a chance.

In 1933, McCarran was up in Maine when the Senate suddenly agreed to vote the next day on a veterans bill, and the line-up was so close that the Nevadan's vote was needed.

By chartering a special car, and then flying from Boston, McCarran got to the Capitol just in time for the vote.

$175,000 School for Arlington Is Declared Immediate Need

County Authorities Contend Bond Issue Is Only Solution of Overcrowding of Washington-Lee High.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 500. Clarendon, Va.

Because of the rapid development of Arlington County during the last year, which has exceeded any period of growth in the history of the county, the building of a junior high school at an estimated cost of $175,000 to meet the growing school population is regarded as imperative.

With the existing crowded conditions at the Washington Lee High School, it is pointed out by county authorities that the only possible solution to the problem is a bond issue which must be approved by the people.

The Washington Lee High School was erected in 1924 and opened the following year with an enrollment of 400. The graduating class that year totaled one student. In 1935 the graduating class numbered 209, with a total enrollment of 1,900.

At the time the building was erected provision was made for 18 classrooms, 2 laboratories, 1 gymnasium, an auditorium and 22 teachers. With the enrollment increasing each year, additions were made in 1930, consisting of 29 more classrooms, another laboratory, 3 shops, another gymnasium, a library and 25 additional teachers.

The present building is equipped to take care of a total of 1,800 students. With the present enrollment of 2,197 the school's capacity is exceeded by 397 students, and the indications are that this number will be materially increased with the promotions from the elementary schools in February.

It is pointed out that the school authorities have studied every means of financing the project, and find that the only solution is a bond issue, which puts the matter entirely in the hands of the voters of Arlington County.

Randolph Leigh, of McLean, Va., is announced as the guest speaker at the luncheon meeting of the Organized Women Voters of Arlington County, to be held Wednesday at 12:30 p. m. at St. Mary's Episcopal Church on Glebe road.

The Zoning Appeal Board of Arlington County will hold a public hearing Wednesday, January 29 at 2:30 o'clock at the courthouse. The meeting is being held to consider possible illumination of Paragraph 18 Section 3 of the zoning ordinance, which now permits erection of apartment houses in residential sections or, to amend the section so that a 300-foot setback will be required instead of a 100-foot setback.

The gaping hole in the prow of the liner Cherokee as she limped into Jacksonville yesterday gives an idea of the force with which she rammed the British freighter, Welcombe, in the fog the day before. None of the Cherokee's 123 passengers was hurt, neither was the ship's 100-man crew nor the Welcombe's crew of 36.

Wilson Murder Grand Jury To Be Convened Tomorrow

Rockville Courthouse Will Be Heavily Guarded as Indictments Are Sought Against Four in Route Agent's Death.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST,
1111 Oak Avenue, Silver Spring, Md.
Telephone, Shepherd 2363.

With its customary secrecy accentuated by heavily armed guards, the Montgomery County grand jury will meet tomorrow at Rockville, Md., to hear the testimony of 12 witnesses in the slaying of Allen B. Wilson, newspaper route agent, October 23, 1934.

Elaborate safeguards to protect the identity of the witnesses have been ordered by the court. Ten county policemen will guard the third floor of the courthouse, which will be barred to the public while the grand jury is in session. Other guards in plain clothes, some rumored to be G-men, will patrol the courthouse and its grounds.

Officials fear gangland threats of reprisals may "reach" some witnesses if their identity becomes known. A majority of the witnesses have no criminal police records, State's Attorney James H. Pugh, declared.

Two of these to appear before the inquisitorial body are eyewitnesses to the slaying, Pugh said; but he refused to elaborate his statement.

The grand jury will convene in the courtroom on the third floor at 10 a. m. Judge Charles W. Woodward will not be present because of the death yesterday of his father-in-law, Arthur Poole Fletchall, whose funeral will take place tomorrow.

Either Chief Judge Hammond Urner or Associate Judge Arthur D. Willard will convene the body. The judge will caution the grand jurors that they must go beyond even the usual secrecy of a grand jury and refrain from all comment on the case.

The judge then will turn the grand jury over to States Attorney James H. Pugh, who will marshall the witnesses and ask that three indictments be returned against each of four defendants, with possibly a fourth indictment to be sought against the defendants as a group.

Those whom the prosecutor will seek to have indicted are:

Albert S. Sutton, now in the District Jail at Washington.

William Thomas Cleary, under arrest in Washington.

Albert McDermott, alias John "Slim" Dunn, a prisoner in the Federal Prison on Alcatraz Island, off the California Coast.

Ernest S Myers, a prisoner at Lorton Reformatory

The grand jury will be asked to return indictments charging the murder of Wilson; attempted murder with explosives of "Mickey" McDonald, Washington gambler, in front of whose Takoma Park, Md., home Wilson was killed by slayers who are believed to have mistaken him for McDonald; and carrying concealed deadly weapons. The fourth charge possibly to be pressed is conspiracy to murder.

It was rumored in Rockville that a prominent Rockville attorney would be of defense counsel, if indictments are returned.

Should indictments be handed up, States' Attorney Pugh will move to have McDermott, better known as "Slim" Dunn, returned to Rockville for trial. The exact procedure of such action had not been worked out, but Pugh believes he can have Dunn on hand for the trial within 30 days.

All of those against whom indictments will be asked are under arrest, or are being held by police.

Purchase of voting machines for use in crowded Montgomery County suburban precincts, and adoption of the so-called park area bill providing for development of small parks in municipalities, are included in a legislative program to be discussed by the Kensington Chamber of Commerce Wednesday night, at the Kensington elementary school.

McSwain, of South Carolina, chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, on the subject of "How to Keep Out of War." Emory H. Bogley, a member of the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission, also will speak.

Chief Charles E. Schrom, of the District Fire Department, and other fire officials of Washington and Baltimore, will address a county-wide meeting of the Montgomery County Volunteer Firemen's Association Thursday night at the Takoma Park Fire House.

The Kensington Voluteer Fire Department will give its annual banquet and smoker Wednesday night at Darby's Inn, near Aspen. Newly elected officers of the department will be installed.

Foster, assistant to the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, at a meeting of the Montgomery County American Legion Council, in Kensington. Three hundred members of the county's seven American Legion Posts attended. Among the other speakers were Walter E. Huff, secretary to Mayor Howard W. Jackson, of Baltimore; Mayor Alfred L. Geiger, of Kensington, and Caesar Aiello, of Hyattsville, past department commander of the Maryland legion.

Albert A. Ady, assistant county agent for Montgomery County, has been appointed State Grange deputy for Montgomery County, it was announced yesterday by T. Roy Brooks, of Silver Air, Md., master of the Maryland State Grange. Ady will have charge of organization work.

At the annual meeting of the St. Luke's Lutheran Church, Redland, Md., Arch Smith was elected superintendent; Albert Fink, assistant superintendent; Miss Grace Fink, secretary; Miss Hinda Fraley, assistant secretary, and Mrs. Ottis Godfrey, treasurer.

Miss Bessie Brake was elected organist.

State Master P. Roy Brooks, of Hardford County, recently installed new officers of the Olney Grange, at a meeting in the Sandy Spring Firehouse. The grange voted contributions of $25 to the State endowment fund, $25 to Friends Service, $25 to pay off indebtedness on the Ashton water tank, $50 for hose for the Sandy Spring Volunteer Fire Department, and $10 to the Oliver Kelly memorial fund.

Officers installed were: Robert H. Miller, master; E. W. Haviland, overseer; C. Martin, Steward; Miss Elizabeth S. Spencer J. H. Brown, chief, reported purchase of 300 feet of new hose and completion of the new Reo pumper, at a meeting of the Sandy Spring Volunteer Fire Department. The Women's Auxiliary presented 100 feet of hose to the department.

Plans were discussed for the annual banquet to be served by the auxiliary February 12 at the firehouse. The association voted to attend the quarterly meeting of the Montgomery County Firemen's Association Thursday at Takoma.

Anne Lyddane Seeks Change Of Trial Scene

Lawyers to Say She Can't Get Fair Deal in Death Plot Case.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., Jan. 18.—In a surprise move, lawyers for Mrs. Anne Lyddane today sought a change of venue to transfer her second murder conspiracy trial away from Montgomery County.

Presiding Judge Hammond Urner and Associate Judge Arthur D. Willard and Charles W. Woodward agreed to hear arguments on the proposal in the Circuit Court at Rockville Friday.

The second trial of Mrs. Lyddane on a charge of conspiring to murder her husband, Francis ("Slom") Lyddane, earlier was set for January 27 in Rockville. The jury failed to agree at the first trial.

It was reported that State Senator Stedman Prescott and Kenneth Lyddane, of defense counsel, agreed to offer a formal motion for the change of venue before Friday's hearing.

Both defense lawyers and State's Attorney James H. Pugh and his special assistant, John Oxley, were present at today's informal conference with the judges.

Indications were the defense attorneys would argue their client could not get a fair trial in Montgomery County because of the wide publicity already given to the case.

Reporters were unable to locate either Prescott or Lyddane. Pugh declined to discuss the case.

Louis to Rest Until Fight In June

Gastanaga Bout Is Off; Schmeling Next Foe for Bomber.

Plans 2-Month Voyage; Retzlaff Battle Nets Negro $23,069.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—No more chins for Joe Louis to smash until he meets the beetle-browed Max Schmeling in New York next June.

This was definitely decided tonight as plans for the Brown "Embalmer" to appear in Detroit in a match with Isidore Gastanaga were dropped. Promoter Mike Jacobs and Louis' co-managers, Julian Black and John Roxborough, agreed that Louis needed a rest and that he should have it.

Consequently, Louis became immediately concerned over a belated honeymoon trip to Honolulu or the Philippines with his bride. He is planning a two-month voyage, after spending two weeks at home with his mother, who is ill in Detroit.

Louis fingered a bank roll of $23,069.23, his share of the gross gate of $68,797.62 for registering his twenty-third knockout in tagging lantern-jaw Charley Retzlaff in 1 minute and 25 seconds in the Chicago Stadium last night. It was the quickest knockout Louis has scored, quicker by a minute than the time he forced Kingfish Levinsky to surrender. Louis' purse was just $7,000 less than Jack Johnson was paid to defend his title against Jess Willard in Havana.

Retzlaff, making no mention of retiring, found solace in a check for $9,803.16. Long lean Charley, homesick for his wife and three children, left tonight for his ranch near Leonard, N. Dak. He probably never again will fight the brown genius who bowled him over, but he wants to, nevertheless.

Punched—Missed.

"I guess everybody is satisfied now that I wasn't afraid of that fellow," Retzlaff said. "I gambled, threw my best punches and missed. Louis is a good sharp puncher, but no killer. There is no use of me asking for another match, but that is my desire, anyway. The only way I can get it is to go back to work for it. That is just what I intend to do."

Joe Jacobs, manager of Schemling, left tonight for New York along with Promoter Mike Jacobs. Joe Jacbs said Schmeling would sail for New York April 15 from his home in Germany, and that he would pick out a training camp next week.

Jacobs, who watched Louis achieve his fifth major victory without batting an eye, said Schemling would "ruin Louis."

"Anybody who carrier the fight to Louis can beat him," he said, and Schemling can do that."

Grant Avenges Upset Defeat By Hendrix

By the Associated Press.

TAMPA, Fla., Jan. 18.—Bryan Grant, jr., of Atlanta, the country's third ranking tennis ace, gained revenge in the semi-finals of the twelfth annual Dixie Tournament today for a defeat handed him last week at Coral Gables by young Arthur Hendrix, of Lakeland.

The Georgian eliminated his rival handily in straight sets, 6-2, 6-4, 6-4. Grant won many of his games from Hendrix with the loss of only a point or two.

In the other semi-finals bracket, Martin Buxby, of Miami, dethroned the present title holder, Charles Harris, of West Palm Beach, and will meet Grant in the final tomorrow.

Buxby earned his right to meet the Georgia "Giant Killer" by wining a hard fought long drawn out duel with Harris.

The match finally went to the Floridian, after each had taken alternate sets and the deciding match had gone to 8 all. The set scores for Buxby were 6-3, 5-7, 6-1, 3-6, and 10-8.

Eastern High Rallies To Win Over Riordan

Eastern High's interhigh championship basketball team encountered unexpectedly strong opposition from Riordan School, of Highland, N. Y., yesterday at the Lincoln Park school, but staged a second-half rally to win, 43-35.

The New Yorkers took a 26-14 lead in the first half, but Eastern found its stride in the last two periods and dominated the play in the late going. The visitors were guests of the school at a moving picture and a luncheon at the school following the game.

Eddie Brown Wins Run; G. U. Freshman Fails

New York, Jan. 18 (AP).—Eddie Brown, of the New York A. C., closed fast in the stretch to defeat a strong local field in the 600-yard invitation run, feature of the Grover Cleveland Democratic Club track meet at the Seventh Regiment Armory tonight.

The victor's time was 1:17.5.

Jim McPoland, Georgetown freshman, was in the running until the last few yards.

And He Got Up From the Floor to Hold Maryland Ace to a Draw

Ivan Nedomatsky, bright star of the Maryland boxing team, strides nonchalantly to a neutral corner as Referee Charley Reynolds tolls the count of nine over Sully Greco, Catholic U. 135-pounder in the first round last night. 2 Knockouts Turn Tide Near End

Rydzewski and Katalinas Stop Rivals to Aid in 4½-3½ Victory.

Mix Turns Back Webb; La Salle Triumphant Over Schwartz.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

LEVELING a barrage of lethal punches at the inviting chins of their last two opponents in the 175-pound and heavyweight divisions, the clouting Cardinals of Catholic University came from behind to score a stunning 4½-to-3½ upset victory over the highly touted and heavily backed University of Maryland maulers last night at Brookland.

Four thousand fans, all that could be accommodated, while an additional 500 were turned away because of fire regulations, saw a towel hurled to the rescue of Johnny Birkland as he flopped on the mat in the second round of the heavyweight fight, his face a bloody mask, signaling the most amazing victory any Catholic U. team ever has scored.

Two Sour Notes.

Astounding as Maryland's defeat was, and it stunned virtually everybody, including the C. U. gladiators, there were a couple of sour notes mixed in with the sweet music of victory. The first occurred in the 145-pound division wherein Fred Mix, of Catholic, outpointed Webb, a clever and hard puncher. Webb, from the fans' viewpoint, appeared to score heavily with a hard right to the head in both the second and third rounds, but the officials voted the decision to Mix, who used his left jab to the best advantage throughout.

Mix, incidentally, went into action on an injured ankle, which he turned during the week in training.

The second, and sourest note of the evening, occurred in the 175-pound class and ended on Gormley's kayo by Rydzewski.

Two Rounds Even.

They fought two rounds in virtually even terms, Gormley scoring with a hard right to the head, which landed infrequently, and his opponent using his famed left jab to compile the points in his advantage. Going into the third, Rydzewski caught Gormley over near the ropes and they exchanged both hands to the face and body.

Rydzewski followed a left jab with a short but hard right to the head that floored Gormley for a count of one. The Maryland youth bounded up almost instantly and apparently was waiting for Referee Reynolds to step between them before permitting the round to go on. But Reynolds only signaled Rdzewski back and only an arm's length away the Cardinal representative shot a hard right to the

142 Registered By Mehlhorn For Lead

By the Associated Press.

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 18.—"Wild Bill" Mehlhorn, of Louisville, Ky., duplicating his first round score of 71, took what appeared to be a safe lead at the end of 36 holes of play today in the $3,000 Sacramento Open golf tournament with a total of 142.

The broad-shouldered links cowboy, jamming his 10-gallon hat down on his ears, played machine-like golf, going out in par 36 and coming back in 35, one under perfect figures.

His card showed two birdies and he slipped over par on only one hole, playing the remaining 15 holes in par figures. Like yesterday, when his sub-par 71 set the tournament pace, Melhorn had 32 putts.

Herman Barron, White Plains, N. Y., professional was entrenched in second place with 73—70—143, one shot ahead of young Byron Nelson, of Ridgewood, N. J., who became the first player to better par by shooting a sparkling 69, three under this afternoon.

Max Baer, former heavyweight boxing champion, duplicated his 80 of the first day for a 176 total.

Walter Hagen, with most of a gallery of 1,000 fans trailing him, put on a show which had his followers gaping. Hagen finished the day with a 73 and a 36-hole score of 149, shooting a 34 on the back nine. Tied at 145 were Horton Smith, Chicago, 74-71, and Lester Bolstead, Minneapolis, 73-70. Five were bunched at 146—Harold McSpaden, unattached, and last year's tournament winner, 74-72; Ky Laffoon, Chicago, 74-72; Wiffy Cox, Washington, D. C., 73-73; Craig Wood, Deal, N. J., 73-73, and Harry Cooper, Chicago, 74-72.

Navy Mum on Transfer Of Army Contest Site

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 18 (AP).—Officials of the Naval Academy declined to comment today on reports that next year's Army-Navy football game would be transferred from Franklin Field in Philadelphia to the new Philadelphia Municipal Stadium.

Commander John H. Brown, director of football at the academy, declined to comment other than to say that the 1936 schedule lists the game for Philadelphia.

Harrison's 687 Set Leads Sweepstakes

PAUL HARRISON, member of the leading Arcadia team in the District League, assumed the lead among a field of 27 of the District's foremost bowlers in the first block of the Howard Campbell Sweepstakes last night at the Lucky Strike Alleys. Harrison covered the five-game stretch with a brilliant set of 687.

Harry Hilliard, of Hyattsville, shot 686 to gain second place, and Lou Pantos finished third with 662. Astor Clarke, No. 1 ranking bowler of the city and winner of the event in 1931, went into fourth place with 638, 2 pins in front of "Hokie" Smith, Occidental star, and 7 pins better than Charley Phillips, Masonic League bowler.

Clarke Stumps.

Harrison, rolling 418 for his first three games, was paced by Clarke with 421. Clarke faded from competition with a low 107 in the fourth game, Harrison taking the lead with a 138 game. Harry Hilliard climbed into second place with a 152 game in his final effort to top Pantos, who also wound up his set with a 152 game.

Charlie Phillips was assured of a consolation prize of $25, chalking up the best single game of the event with 164.

The stakes will be continued next Saturday night at the Georgetown Recreation Alleys, and the windup is slated for the Convention Hall the following Saturday. First prize for the event amounts to $275; second, $150; third, $75, and fourth, $50.

Race Still Wide Open.

With two more blocks of the event still to be rolled, the final victor is till very much in doubt. In the past it has been history that the leaders have faltered in the home stretch of the event. The pressure which is brought to bear on the front runners by a field of this class and the cash and prestige at stake, provides a huge stumbling block, for all the entries, most of all the leaders.

Shute Is Victor In Miami Golf With a 138

By the Associated Press.

MIAMI, Fla., Jan. 18.—Denny Shute, veteran Chicago professional, added a 3 under par 69 to the like figure he had yesterday for 138, to take the $200 top prize in the regular division of the 36-hole, $1,500 Tropic open golf tournament here today.

Shute also copped first money, $250, in the "half stroke putt" category—an experiment designed to remove the emphasis from the green and place it on tee and approach shots. His score, counting putts at half strokes only, was 115.

Three strokes back of Shute, was a fellow Chicagoan, Frank Walsh, who shared the 18-hole lead but slipped to 72, even par, today. Walsh also came second in the half stroke putt affair, with 115½, collecting $300 in all.

Three golfers were tied for third place with 144, collecting $90 each. They were Leonard Dodson, Pembine, Wis., Joe Turnesa, Elmsford, N. Y., and Dick Metz, Chicago.

Metz won third prize in the half-stroke putt division, receiving $100.

Lions, Packers Vie With Coast Teams

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Calif., Jan. 18.—Two "standouts" of professional football, the Detroit Lions and Green Bay Packers, will match their gridiron strategy against California all-star aggregations tomorrow.

Here the Lions are expected to draw a near-capacity crowd of 20,000 into Gilmore Stadium to meet a team of California gridiron stars built around Cal Clemens, former University of Southern California player.

In San Francisco the Green Bay Packers will take the field odds-on favorites to defeat a Coast squad composed largely of football players with pro experience.

The Packers and the Lions will meet here in a final exhibition game a week from tomorrow.

International Golf.

Sarasota, Fla., Jan. 18 (AP).—George R. Jacobus, president of the Professional Golfers Association of America, said today American and Australian golfers would play a match February 5 and 6 to determine the possession of the Lakes trophy, captured last year by an American team. It will be played at the Lakewood Country Club, Long Beach, Calif.

Meet Major Bowes Rickey, of St. Louis

St. Louis, Jan. 18 (AP).—Branch Rickey had a new nickname today—"Maj. Bowes."

A fan pinned it on the vice president of the St. Louis Cardinals after Rickey announced he would stock the newest Redbird farm, Sacramento in the Pacific Coast League, with amateur and semi-pro players.

The fan objected to "amateur hours in baseball."

Braddock Discounts Joe Louis' Victories

Bennettsville, S. C., Jan. 18 (AP). To Champion James J. Braddock the latest ring victories by Joe Louis "doesn't mean a thing."

"That was no fight," he scoffed when asked what he thought of the Louis-Charlie Retzlaff bout last night at Chicago.

"Sure, I think I can whip Louis and I'm looking forward to meeting him."

Ten Grid Rivals Are Booked By Terps

FROM upper New York State to southern Florida, the University of Maryland's difficult 1936 football schedule will take the rambling Terrapins next fall. The 11-game campagin finds the Old Liners facing 10 tough opponents in a row after the opening game with St. John's, of Annapolis, at College Park. The schedule, which includes five home games, was released yesterday.

One of the most formidable tests ever attempted by a Washington school, this 1936 calendar not only includes five Southern Conference foes but three high-ranking intersectional opponents among the remaining five. Syracuse University will be played at Syracuse, N. Y., on October 24; the University of Florida at Tampa, Fla., the following week, and Mississippi State at Jackson, Miss., December 5.

Mississippi State is one of the two new schools on the schedule, replacing Western Maryland and Indiana. The other new opponent, University of Richmond, will be played November 7 at Richmond. Release of the schedule was held up by a delay in negotiations with Mississippi State.

The big local game of the year against Georgetown comes off the following week, November 21, at College Park. It was played at Griffith Stadium last season. The Mississippi State contest will conclude the schedule.

The Thanksgiving Day game with Washington-Lee will mark the start of a holiday series with the Generals.

September 26, St. John's (Annapolis), at College Park.
October 3, Virginia Poly, at Roanoke or Blacksburg; 10, North Carolina, at Chapel Hill; 17, Virginia, at College Park; 24, Syracuse, at Syracuse; 31, Florida, at Tampa.
November 7, Richmond U., at Richmond; 14, Virginia Military Institute, at College Park; 21, Georgetown, at College Park; 26, Washington and Lee, at Baltimore Stadium.
December 5, Mississippi State, at Jackson, Miss.

V. M. I. Boxers Are Swamped By Virginia

UNIVERSITY, Va., Jan. 18.—Virginia's boxers loosed powerhouse tactics on a stunned V. M. I. team here tonight, scoring a sweeping 7½-to-½ victory over the Cadets before the usual capacity crowd of 5,000 in Memorial Gymnasium.

The fraction of a point was handed to the Lexington team in the heavyweight division, when both Noll, of Virginia, and Kane, of V. M. I., received cuts over the eye. A physician, stationed at the ringside for such an emergency, ordered the bout discontinued, and Referee Elder Craft ordered a draw.

The Cavalier captain, "Mutt" Womer, put Donovan, of V. M. I., on the canvas early in the first round of the 145-pound scrap to register one of his team's three quick knockouts. Marion Brooks preceded him with a second-round technical knockout over Joe Bell, and Ray Schmidt finished the cadet 175-pounder, Dulaney, in the first minute of their first round.

The Virginians exhibited a complete change in attitude over last week's showing against Harvard, and went to work in a business-like fashion. Freddy Cramer, heavyweight, was held out of competition for another week's rest of his facial cut.

Home Town Boy Losses.

Rosser Eastham, Charlottesville lad, came back home tonight wearing the Cadet red and white to accept two fists full of punishment from George Cary, the Virginia bantamweight, who was competing for the first time in two years after understudying Gordon Rainey, Cavalier co-captain and conference champion.

Marion Brooks, Virginia 135-pounder, packed too much punch for Joe Bell, Cadet novice. Brooks had a mastery from the opening gong and carried the game but less experienced Cadet for a round and a half. Through the 34 seconds that

SONNY WORKMAN.

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

HIALEAH PARK, Miami, Jan. 18.—Mantagna, a disgraceful thirteenth in the Inaugural Handicap here three days ago, suddenly developed a running urge today and carried off major honors in the Granada Handicap, a $1,500 race that featured the week-end program. It was by the meager but conclusive margin of a nose that the gelded son of Sweep managed to stagger to the finish line to bring disappointment to the backers to Lynx Eye, the heavily played favorite. Five lengths away from the battle for the first award, Chance Ray won third money from Martin Barton.

Mantagna, owned by W. H. Furst, was supported in only lukewarm fashion and returned a mutuel of $12.

The crowd of 10,000 saw tragedy narrowly averted in the first race, when Jockeys Sonny Workman, the Washington veteran, and Jimmy Lynch went sprawling among the

Griffith Due to Reach Orlando, Fla., Today

Orlando, Fla., Jan. 18 (AP).—Connie Mack, veteran manager of the Philadelphia Athletics, arrived here today for a five-week vacation.

Mack is to be joined next week by Tom Shibe, of Philadelphia, owner of the club. The Athletics will open winter training quarters in Fort Myers late in February.

Paris, Jan. 18 (AP).—The United States Olympic hockey team, playing its second match in France in its pre-Olympic exhibitions, lost a rough, ragged game to the French Volants, 4 to 3, tonight. The same teams played a 4-4 tie here a week ago.

Furr To Face Most Severe Test in Halaiko Here Tomorrow

Feared Rival Boasts Fine Record

Recently Beat Ferrando in One of Last Year's Major Upsets.

FITFUL Phillip Furr, District welterweight champion, who seems to have settled down to a career of earnest ring endeavor, will tackle the most ominous obstacle he has encountered so far in his campaign between the ropes when he meets Steve Halaiko at Turner's Arena tomorrow night.

Halaiko not only is one of the most pleasing fighters in the business today, he is one of the most feared and most successful. So highly is he regarded that he has been matched with Lightweight Champion Tony Canzoneri in an overweight affair which may lead to a title bout in New York on February 3.

Frequently compared to Billy Petrolle as a crowd pleaser, Halaiko is perhaps best known as a wrecker of promising careers. During the past year he knocked out Billy Hogan when Billy appeared headed up the ladder towards bigger and better things.

Trounced Ferrando.

Just recently, Steve entered the ring on the long end of 4-to-1 odds against Joey Ferrando, ranked seventh among the lightweights, and, much to the surprise of everyone but himself, he trounced Joey in one of 1935's minor-major upsets.

Wether Arcelli, another highly regarded youngster, is but one more who has been whipped by Steve since the New Year. In 1935, Halaiko defeated both Bobby Pacho and Al Casimini and won his third decision from Wesley Ramey. In the same 12 months, Steve lost two split decisions to Cleto Locatelli, a roundly booed decision to Leonard Del Genio and made a great fight against Pedro Montanez, European champion.

Drew With Ambers.

Among others who have fallen victim to Steve's busy fists have been Lew Ambers, whom he held to a draw which was considered a moral victory; Cocoa Kid; Parish Apice, Herman Perlick and George Salvatore. He has been stopped but twice, losing in a technical knockout to Jimmy Leto and being flattened by Harry Dublinsky, who scored a quick knockout over Bob Wilson here last summer.

Two of the greatest handlers in the business will second Halaiko against Furr. Spike Webb, Naval Academy and American Olympic team boxing coach, will be behind Steve. Spike was in charge of the Olympic team in 1928, of which Halaiko was a member. Ray Arcel, one of the greatest trainers in the country, will accompany Steve here.

On Comeback Trail.

Furr's last effort to hit the big time was frustrated by clever Izzy Janazzo, who boxed his way to a one-sided win over Phil. Vastly improved, taking the game more seriously and in better condition, Furr recently started up the comeback trail by knocking out Sid Silas and decisively beating Bob Wilson.

If Furr is victorious over Halaiko, he will be signed by Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn for three fights. Cary Wright, Johnny Jadick and Harry Dublinsky are being considered as his opponents in that event.

Wright Faces Essrick.

Two other welterweights who figure in the 147-pound picture here have been signed in preliminaries to the main bout. Cary Wright, who is hot on the trail of a title bout with Furr, will meet George Essrick, of Baltimore, in a six-round semifinal.

Roy Manley, southpaw welterweight, will meet Angelo Meola, hard-hitting Baltimore lad, in a special six-rounder. A brace of attractive four-rounders will complete the bill. In them Chief Wilson, a full-blooded Cherokee Indian, will meet Sam Bacala, Baltimore welterweight, and Billy Lancaster will tackle Jesse James, a Southern lightweight.

Local Soccer Clubs Will Battle Today

Sun Radio Faces Littoria in Attractive Game.

Subject to weather conditions, local soccer clubs will resume Recreation League competition today with a trio of attractive games. Sun Radio and Littoria meet at 1 p. m., and Heurich Brewers will face Silver Spring at 2:45, both games being at Benning. Mitchell Brothers will clash with Occoquan on Rosedale Playground at 2:30.

These are the opening contests in the second half, and the winner will play Sun Radio, first-half winners, for league championship honors. Stronger than for some years past by reason of the admission of the strong Heurich Brewers team, the league expects a close race, with Heurich the slight favorites.

Heurich expects to put its regular line-up against the rapidly improving Silver Spring squad. Sun Radio and Littoria can be relied upon to furnish another of the thrilling tussles invariably seen when they meet, while Mitchell Brothers eleven is none too sure of overcoming Occoquan, Mitchells having lost Johnson, Nau and Bailey for the remainder of the season.

Faces Furr Tomorrow Night

STEVE HALAIKO, New York welterweight, who faces Phil Furr at Turner's Arena tomorrow night, is shown set for action.

Around the Ring . . .

By Bill McCormick.

IT would begin to seem that the person who ultimately will whip Joe Louis, if he has been born, probably right now is crawling around on the floor, gurgling "Goo-goo," "Ga-ga," "Dada," etc.

Which is a funny coincidence, when you stop to think of it, as the guys who are fighting Joe now are doing that just a few minutes after they lace on the gloves, except that instead of "Dada," Louis is making 'em say "Uncle."

Following the pitiful exhibitions King Levinsky and Max Baer made against the Negro, it became almost a common belief that if any puncher could be found with the heart and courage to step out and mix it up with Louis, he would have somewhere near an equal chance—anyway, a better chance than if he was overcome by timidity.

Last Friday night we had a puncher, and perhaps a better puncher than either Levinsky or Baer, in the ring with Louis, and, from all reports, it would seem that Charley Retzlaff was not lacking in the least when it came to intestinal fortitude.

And look what happened to poor Charley. He landed his Sunday punch right smack on Joe's phlegmatic puss, and the next thing he knew he was making unsuccessful efforts to pull himself from the canvas.

All of which would lead one to believe that the fighter to beat Louis has not yet grown into long pants. As a matter of fact, when you stop to think of it, perhaps the style of fighting to beat Louis has not yet even been devised.

While on the subject of Louis, it might be well to try to figure out just what there is about the saffron-hued socker which instills such ungodly fear in most of his opponents.

This writer has made it a point to discuss that matter with several of the fighters who have gone down before the Negro's cruel fists and from bits gathered here and there from those who have been chopped down, has learned a very interesting fact.

It seems the thing that is most awe-inspiring to Louis' opponents is not his frozen face, not his terrific two-handed punching, not his clever boxing, but the fact that he keeps moving in constantly like some relentless machine grooved to a straight track.

"If he'd only back away or even circle once in a while, he wouldn't scare you half so much," confessed one man upon whose person the Bomber exploded a few hand grenades. "As it is, he just keeps shufflin' in—and after a few minutes of that you get so rattled, you don't know what to do."

Another thing about Joe that seems to frighten his opposition no little is the fact that his punches hurt. To one not well versed in the facts of fisticuffing, it would seem that might be taken for granted, but such is not the case.

Very few boxers feel any pain whatsoever during the course of a bout. If they are knocked out, it is a painless operation and a business that sometimes is slightly pleasant. That is, when the punching is done by an ordinary puncher.

The boys who have been on the receiving end with Louis tell me this is not the case when he hits. When he hits he hurts—and he paralyzes. The whole thing makes it very uncomfortable for he who gets slapped. As evidence of the effect Joe's wallops have, one has only to recall the hurt, puzzled expressions that have crept over the faces of all his opponents once they have been socked.

Carnera always assumes that look when hit solidly, but only when smacked by Louis did Levinsky, Brown, Baer and Paolino screw their faces up into expressions of mortal agony and bewilderment. Perhaps Levinsky best described the effect of a few Louis wallops when he described himself as getting "mum all over" in the first round of their engagement.

Not that I am in the habit of arguing with the Boss, especially in these trying times, but I must take exception to some of the remarks Shirley Povich made and quoted in a recent column he devoted to collegiate boxing.

As I recall it, the Boss, who knows his way around pretty well in both the college and professional fight game, claimed that undergraduates ran a grave risk of becoming punch drunk when they were overmatched. As I recall it, he even said that one blow could make a fighter punch drunk.

For the life of me, I can't see how a college fighter can get punch drunk. In the first place, they fight only three two-minute rounds once a week. Even I, as much spiritus frumenti as I have consumed in the past decade, could fumble around that long without taking undue punishment.

In the second place, the college boys fight with pillows—in the form of 10-ounce gloves—on their maulies. I cannot see how anyone with an ordinarily sturdy chin could be hurt by a punch from a 10-ounce glove. If the boss, or any who agree with him, would like to see me prove my point, I am perfectly willing to allow any college lightweight you can name to go over me for three rounds with those big mittens—and I'll wager any given amount that I'll be rightside up at the finish. Of course, I won't do any fighting back, because I couldn't lift those big gloves for one two-minute round, let alone three.

College boxers who can't take it—and there are many—get stopped with a blow or two, and that type of fighter never winds up slap happy. It is the guy who catches and catches heavy blows from light gloves who winds up squaring off every time a street car bell clangs. I never yet have seen a fellow who got punch drunk from one punch, and if the boss can produce one, I will consume the paper upon which this is written without salt, pepper or mustard.

And another thing . . . but I guess that's enough of arguing with the boss. After all, bosses are pretty touchy critters—and I still must live (Cries of "Why? Why?").

Workman Injured In Spill at Hialeah

flying hooves. Although Workman was carried from the track unconscious and apparently the more seriously injured of the two, he came to in the dressing room and suffered only a shaking-up. Lynch received a broken collar bone.

The accident occurred at the far turn. The Gong went down with Lynch after stumbling. Workman could not swing Singers Folly out of the way and his mount tripped and fell. Lynch bounded to his feet but Workman lay still. The Washington rider said that his horse bumped him as they rolled onto the track. He wanted to ride Sassafras in the fifth race but the track physician ruled against it.

The Gong Was Destroyed.

To return to the feature, Mantagna was in front from the break, Round Table, as usual, delayed the start and was placed on the outside of the gates. When the field came into sight out of the mile chute, Lynx Eye was a poor fifth to the ultimate winner.

Nick Wall rode Mantagna steadily throughout while Lynx Eye gradually worked his way toward the leaders. In the stretch, Lynx Eye moved up almost abreast of Mantagna but he could not make up that matter of inches that the chart makers call a nose.

The daily double brought a return of $30.20 to those who backed the combination of Stubbs, an $11.60 mutuel in the first race, and Crossbow II, a $3.60 favorite in the third.

D. C. Race Bill To Be Offered Tomorrow

Mrs. Norton to Introduce Measure; Keen Fight in Senate Seen.

A BILL to legalize horse racing in the District will be introduced in the House tomorrow by Chairman Mary T. Norton, of the House District Committee.

The measure will authorize the setting up of a three-man racing commission to control whatever track may be established. Commissioners will be paid salaries of $2,000 each for their services.

Under the terms of the bill, the track operators will be permitted to collect 10 per cent of all gross receipts and required to turn over a third of this amount to the District Commissioners as tax revenue.

While the bill would permit any promoter to set up a track under its provisions, it is expected that the old Benning track would be the first to be opened as it is already under option.

The House two years ago passed a similar race track bill under the sponsorship of former Representative Black (Democrat), New York. There was no serious opposition and little debate.

Should the measure pass the House, however, it faces determined opposition in the Senate. At least four members of the Senate District Committee, including Chairman William H. King, have stated they would oppose it, and so far it has found no champion.

It was the Senate that killed the Black bill two years ago.

Cue Tourney Slated.

New York, Jan. 18 (AP).—With J. Howard Shoemaker, of New York, defending the title he has won 16 times, seven players will compete in the National Amateur Pocket Billiard Championship opening at the Strand Billiard Academy Wednesday.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—STUBBS, $11.60, $6.10, $5.20; MONT BLANC, $8.30, $5.80; SANDY BOOT, $8.20.

STUBBS began quickly, opened up a winning lead early, had good speed all the way and was never seriously menaced. MONT BLANC broke in a tangle, settled in his stride rapidly to enter a forward position on outside entering the back stretch, rallied mightily at stretch turn, but had too much taken out of him early and bumped badly in the last quarter-mile. SANDY BOOT, stoutly ridden and forced to race on the outside, finished willingly to outstay SHOT UP.

SECOND RACE—Three furlongs. Purse, $800. For 2-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:47. Off at 2:50. Winner, T. B. Martin's blk. c. (2), by Balko—French Doll. Trained by Walter Burrows. Value to winner, $600; second, $125; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:35 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BALKANESE, $31.00, $12.30, $6.90; LITTLE EMPRESS, $3.20, $2.60; ALLONS, $6.90.

BALKANESE forced out soon after the start, had good speed to hold a forward position, rallied nicely after settling on even terms with the pacemaker in the closing furlong, and was up in the last 50 yards. LITTLE EMPRESS had good speed from the beginning, was strongly handled, and held on resolutely until the close. ALLONS bore out slightly after the start, but had good speed and held on willingly under a hard drive.

THIRD RACE—Seven furlongs. Purse, $1,200; allowances. The Clearwater. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:19. Off at 3:23. Winner, Calumet Farm's ch. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—CROSSBOW II, $3.60, $2.80, $2.20; FAUST, $4.40, $2.60; CHANCER, $2.60.

CROSSBOW II, rated nicely while following in close attendance of the leaders, responded willingly to stiff urging, drew on even terms with the pacemaker inside the closing furlong and was up to win in the last few strides. FAUST disposed of MOUNT ECHO after three furlongs, drew clear midway of the turn, saved ground, and fought it out stubbornly nearing the finish. CHANCER, crowded at the final bend, recovered and came to be close to the pacemaker, PLAY CHANCE, who had been in front from the start, was finally overtaken in the last furlong and weakened.

FOURTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $1,500. The Granada Handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:32. Off at 3:37½. Winner, William H. Shortage of Southpaw Pitching Looms as Problem for Nats

Burden Falls Chiefly on Whitehill

THE Washington ball club is threatened with a severe shortage of left-handed pitchers, according to the official 1936 player roster announced yesterday.

Manager Bucky Harris has either shown a lack of concern or is unable to remedy the situation, but the fact remains that among the 14 pitchers listed to assemble at the Orlando, Fla., camp on February 23, only three are southpaws.

And of this trio, only Earl Whitehill looms as a regular. The other left-handers who are bidding for berths are Dick Lanahan, the Washington boy who is still considered a raw rookie, and the veteran Leon Pettit, who does not figure seriously in the 1936 plans of Harris.

The Washington Club has not replaced two veteran left-handers who were released during the 1935 season. Walter Stewart and Bobby Burke, both of whom were regarded as pitching mainstays last spring, were traded in midseason of 1935, leaving Whitehill alone to carry on for the left-handed contingent.

Southpaws Always Threat.

During the last three seasons, Washington managers always held Whitehill, Stewart and Burke in readiness to oppose the Yankees and Indians, whose hitting strength is concentrated in southpaw swingers, but unless Lanahan justifies all his promises, the Nats no longer will carry the same threat.

Buck Newsom and Ed Linke head the right-handed pitching brigade that Harris will carry through the 1936 season. Jimmy DeShong, the new acquisition from the Yankees, rates close up but a merry battle looms for the other pitching berths.

The favorites at this writing are Pete Appleton, the leading International League pitcher with Montreal last year; Monte Weaver, who showed signs of a comeback with Albany; Henry Coppola, the sore-arm rookie who disappointed after holding the Red Sox to five hits in his first major league start, and Jack Russell, an in-and-outer for two seasons.

Alex McColl Again.

The 1936 roster reveals, too, that Alex McColl, whose age has now appeared as 39 for the past three years, will be given one more trial by the Nats in the South. Despite his record at Chattanooga, where he won 21 games and lost 12, McColl rates among the third-flight prospects which include Harry Oates, Buck Newsom's protege; Joe Bokina, strapping 6-footer from Albany, and Frank Petticola, the young giant who was hampered by illness throughout the 1935 campaign.

To young Oates belongs the distinction of being the biggest man on the Washington squad. He is the only 200-pounder on the roster and he stands 6 feet 4 inches, topping Petticola by an inch. Petticolas, 19 years old, is the baby of the squad.

Catholic U. Upsets Maryland Boxers

jaw that caught Gormley completely off guard and floored him for the fatal ten.

Rydzewski stepped back, looked at Gormley with his guard down in front of him and let him have a right to the jaw that ended hostilities. The knockout was booed long and lustily by Maryland supporters and cheered just as vociferously by Irish fans.

Greco Surprises Foe.

Even more surprising than his team's defeat, perhaps was Ivan Nedomatsky's draw with "Sully" Greco in the 155-pound division, and it was the turning point of the evening's festivities. Nedomatsky looked slower than he was last season while amassing a string of knockout victories and winning the Southern Conference lightweight crown, and he had a good man in front of him with a pair of strong arms and a strong heart.

Greco caught a hard right hook flush on the chin early in the first round and toppled to the canvas for a nine count, but he got up and came back fighting to even up the score. Surprised and apparently chagrined Nedomatsky hounded Greco throughout the final round, but the Cardinal representative avoided any kayo punches and did enough pounding on his own account to impress the judges.

Ed Shegogue Wins.

Maryland landed a close decision in the curtain-raising 115-pound engagement as Ed Shegogue landed with hard rights to "Tex" Guinean's jaw in the last round.

Tom Birmingham, 125-pounder, put the Terps two-up on their rivals with a clean knockout of John McDermott in the first 15 seconds of the second round.

It remained for Carmen LaSalle, Catholic U. captain, to put his team on the right track with a well-deserved verdict over a game, but outclassed opponent, Morty Schwartz. Schwartz went down under a crushing right to the chin for a nine count in the second, but arose and waded into his tormentor with some good, solid biffs of his own.

Fred Mix tied the count for the Cards with a dubious decision over Capt. Walter Webb, despite a strong finish by the latter who played tit-tat-toe on the Catholic lad's head with hard rights. It was close and the decision was booed and cheered alike.

115 pounds—Sheagu (Md.) defeated Guinan.
125 pounds—Birmingham (U. of Md.) defeated McDermott (knockout in second round).
135 pounds—La Salle (C. U.) defeated Schwartz.
145 pounds—Mix (C. U.) defeated Webb.
155 pounds—Greco (C. U.) drew with Nedomatsky.
165 pounds—Catholic University forfeited to Maryland.
175 pounds—Rydzewski (C. U.) knocked out Gormley in second round. Time, 1:40.
Heavyweight—Katalinas (C. U. defeated Birkland (technical knockout in 45 seconds of the second round).

Wilson's Team Is Defeated In Newark

Special Dispatch to The Post.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 18.—Newark Normal High School's sharpshooting courtiers blasted their way to a 43-to-29 triumph over the Wilson Teachers, of Washington, D. C., tonight at the Normal School gymnasium here. The Silver Streaks went on a scoring spree midway in the opening half to grab a lead which they never relinquished.

The game started slowly and with half the opening stanza gone the count was knotted at 7-7. Led by Capt. Sam Chenetsky, the locals spurted for 12 points before the visitors could find the loop again. Just before the period ended the Owls put an eight-point spurt to pull the count to 23-16.

Right after intermission the Streaks, with Art Wenzel and Chenetsky leading the parade, ran the score up to 32-19. The Owls were unable to get near the Newark net until the last couple of minutes when Phil Fox rang in three in rapid succession to pull the score to respectable figures.

Pennant Contenders Seen Nearer on Par

NEW YORK, Jan. 18 (U.P.).—The new alignment of strength in the American League apparently has drawn the pennant contenders closer together, leaving a wide gap between the four top teams and the second division group.

The strong teams—Detroit, New York, Cleveland and Boston—have added strength, while the second division group—Chicago, Washington, St. Louis and Philadelphia—have either remained at a standstill or weakened their ranks by cash transactions.

Winter maneuvers by the Yankees, Indians and Red Sox indicate that those three clubs are assembling all their resources to block the Tigers' path to their third straight pennant. Winning three pennants in succession is one of the most difficult feats in baseball, and only extraordinarily great teams have been able to turn the trick. Only four teams—the Athletics in 1929-30-31, Yankees in 1926-27-28 and 1921-22-23 and Tigers in 1907-08-09—have been able to win three straight American League pennants. Six teams have failed in bids for their third in a row.

Tom Yawkey has spent $400,000 to strengthen the Red Sox for the 1936 campaign. Col. Jacob Ruppert has declared himself "tired of finishing in second place." Cleveland believes that its formidable array of talent will not go to waste under Steve O'Neill, who succeeded Walter Johnson as manager in midseason last year.

Proven players acquired by the four first-division clubs during the winter follows:

Tigers—Outfielder Al Simmons from the White Sox.

Yankees—Pitcher Monte Pearson from Cleveland, Outfielder Roy Johnson and Pitcher Bump Hadley from Washington.

Indians—Pitcher Johnny Allen from the Yankees.

Red Sox—First Baseman Jimmy Foxx, Pitcher Johnny Marcum, Infielder Eric McNair and Outfielder Roy Cramer from Philadelphia and Outfielder Heinie Manush from Washington.

Washington has acquired Outfielder Carl Reynolds from Boston and Pitcher Jimmy DeShong and Outfielder Jesse Hill from New York, but the Senators apparently are rebuilding with an eye to 1937. The Browns have done nothing to strengthen their club. The White Sox probably have lost strength through the departure of Simmons. Connie Mack apparently has wrecked his club and the A's are pronounced favorites to finish last again.

Sizing up the four contenders, the Yankees and Indians appear to have the pitching, the Red Sox the power, and the Tigers the balance. All of them have weaknesses which might prove disastrous in the heat of the pennant battle. The contenders' principal problems may be outlined as follows:

Tigers: Cochrane, burdened by more responsibility since death of Owner Frank Navin, may be hampered in catching duties. Third base problem may have to be solved by rookie. Official ruling against type of mitt he used and world series wrist injury might affect Greenberg's play.

Yankees: Big problem is whether Lefty Gomez will stage come-back after last year's disastrous campaign. Second Baseman needed to share the aging Tony Lazzeri's burden. Chapman's value may depend upon his ability to get back in the good graces of Yankee Stadium fans. Crosetti's injured leg may slow him up.

Indians: Catching staff doubtful with Pytlak's health a question mark and only three rookies to back him up. Only five infielders on squad. Outfielder Campbell's health leaves him a question mark.

Red Sox: Lack of pitching strength biggest drawback. All outfielders except 41-year-old Big Miller hit left-handed, making them less effective in Fenway Park, which has longest right field fence in league.

Devitt Turns Back Embryonic Police

Leading all the way, Devitt trounced the Police School, 28 to 20, yesterday in the George Washington gym. Adam (Red) Zinkievich, Devitt's all-around athlete, tallied 18 points to outscore his nearest rival by 10.

At the end of the first quarter the embryonic policemen were trailing, 12 to 4, but, through the efforts of Bradshaw, rallied threateningly until the three-quarter mark, bringing the score to 20 to 16, in Devitt's favor.

Maryland Five Winner Over Richmond

LAST-HALF RALLY gave the University of Maryland's basketball team a 28-to-24 victory over the University of Richmond five at Ritchie Coliseum last night. Old Liners trailed on the short end of a 10-to-8 score at half time, but came back to take a lead and staved off a desperate Richmond rally.

The last two periods found both teams shooting wildly from all angles, with Maryland doing the greater damage. With a little more than a minute to play, the Terrapins had a 26-to-22 lead. basket by Brown brought Richmond to within two points of a tie at 26 to 24.

The Virginians narrowly missed tying the count in the remaining seconds with a flurry of long shots, but saw their efforts go awry when Vic Willis, high-scoring Maryland center, caught them off guard to sink the basket, giving Maryland its twenty-eighth point.

Willis was the high scorer for the winners, but Winfrey Brown, Richmond forward, led both teams with 15 points.

Virginia's Boxers Win Over Cadets

the second round continued he obviously pulled his punches until Referee Craft stopped the uneven bout just as the towel came from the Cadet bench.

The Cadet captain, Robert Boyd, scratched an Albemarle County farm boy and found a tartar in Maynard Harlow the Cavalier hard-hitting 158-pounder. Though handicapped by less experience, Harlow kept getting inside the long reach of the Cadet leader with his two-handed tactics. It took all the clever defensive work that Boyd could muster to keep him from taking too many of Harlow's deadly socks one after the other.

Only what the poets call intestinal fortitude, that quality for which V. M. I. is noted, saved Randolph Whittle, from a technical knockout at the hands of Virginia Middleweight Mortimer Caplan. The Cavalier effect left Whittle flying distress signals early in the bout and almost out at the end of the second round, but he could not put in a polishing-off punch.

Iowa Retains $4,552 In Grid Game Taxes

Des Moines, Iowa, Jan. 18 (A.P.).—The University of Iowa has won the right to retain $4,552 it collected in admission taxes on 1932 football games, but the Federal Court here did not dispose of the question of whether the Federal Government can tax admissions to athletic events carried on by a university.

Federal Judge Charles A. Dewey, in ruling yesterday, said the latter question was not an issue in the present case but could come up if the university turned the funds over to the Government and any individual taxpayer brought an action.

Alabama Pitts Here Today For Game

Former Sing Sing Athlete Leads Team Against Heurich's Courtmen.

THE Heurich Pros this afternoon will meet Alabama Pitts' all Stars in a basketball game which will be supported by one of the most colorful preliminary cards ever before scheduled at the Twenty-sixth and D street gym.

Heading the list of attractions is Pretty Charlotte Wade, from Michigan, who will play at forward with the Agriculture Department girls against the Frederick (Md.) Buddies at 2:30. Miss Wade is an Olympic prospect, being one of the best women dash stars in the country. In 40 track meets in 1934, she lost to only one girl. That girl was none other than Stella Walsh, women's sprint champion.

Attractive Preliminary.

The other preliminary game is in itself worthy of being featured on any basketball card. It will bring together Delaware and Hudson and Acacia Insurance at 1:30. D. & H. must win today's game to remain in the running for the Amateur League cup.

In the main game Alabama Pitts, famous Sing Sing graduate, will demonstrate his abilities on the basketball floor. Pitts played baseball with Albany and football with New Rochelle and the Philadelphia Eagles.

He will bring with him a team of outstanding Eastern players One is Al Kellett, who played against the Heurichs several weeks ago as a member of the Paterson, N. J., quintet. Another is Ted Reese, who once did court duty for N. Y. U.

The Heurich Pros will start Everett Russell and Roy Yowell at forwards; Tiny Ingham at center, and Ralph Bennie and Arthur Zahn, at guards. The game will begin around 3:30.

Joe Louis

Slipping; Fritters Away a Minute Stopping Retzlaff

By Jack Miley.

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Joe Louis is slipping. The young man is becoming a disappointment to us and we are starting to lose our childlike faith in Detroit's wonder boy. It took Joe a minute and 25 seconds to chop down Charlie Retzlaff in Chicago last night. He accomplished the actual slaughter in a scant 25 seconds, which was quite satisfactory to his severest critics. But what we'd like to know is, Why and how did he fritter away that other minute?

There were 60 seconds absolutely wasted out of Joe's life. Doesn't he realize that procrastination is the thief of time, and that the old bloke with the scythe is catching up with him—or doesn't he care? Let's have no more of this sort of thing, Louis; or we'll begin to believe you're just another of those morning glories!

Louis could have tried for a record by knocking out the North Dakota clover kicker with a punch or, perhaps two punches, if he wanted to be more generous. But that minute-and-25-seconds stuff is practically a serial, and gives him no status whatever among the quick finishers of the ring.

JACK DEMPSEY finished Fred Fulton in 18 seconds, including the count, in a Harrison, N. J., ball park some 17 years ago. Fulton was a finer fighter than Retzlaff ever was, yet he caved when Johnno jolted him with two left-handers that were practically one blow.

Right off the bat, Jack buried his fist nearly to the elbow in the pallid plasterer's concave stomach. Whipping the left hand free, the devastating Dempsey picked up the arc of the blow and dropped the pop-eyed and open-mouthed Fulton with a jolt to the jaw that knocked Fred's teeth loose. The crowd cried "fake," but poor Freddy couldn't wiggle his chops nor stand anything more substantial than a bedsheet on his stomach for a week afterward.

Now, that is what we call swift destruction, and, compared to Jack's feat, Louis' rub-out of Retzlaff looked like a slow-motion maneuver. Nor was Dempsey's performance the fastest in the book, if you care to quibble over vital statistics.

BAT NELSON nailed Willie Rossler with a single slug, tossed two seconds after the opening bell, when they fought out in Wheaton, Ill., just after the turn of the century. Willie was wheeled away in only 12 seconds, but Bat apologized, "I'd have done it sooner, but it took me a while to get out of my corner!"

Dal Hawkins scored a one-punch, 18-second kayo against Martin Flaherty in Carson City in the 80s; Al Forman floored Ruby Levine in 11½ seconds in England a few years ago and Frank Moran ironed out many a gent in jig time with his famous "Mary Ann" before Dempsey—(Ma, that man's here again)—dusted him off, too.

But to return to Joe Louis, the subject of this piece, we notice that he was paid $25,000 for his setting-up exercises with the china-chinned Retzlaff. Joe got about $2,000 per punch, since he clipped Charlie only about a dozen times.

SOME lightning calculator at the ringside estimated that he earned $344.29 per second of real conflict, which may or may not be precisely accurate, but it'll do.

The movies were peddled for $2,500 and they will be released as another Joe Louis short. The radio rights went to Fabst for $8,000. If Anheuser-Busch had bought the broadcasting privilege they wouldn't have had time to announce the sponsor's complete name, so brief was the brawl. Counting his Paolino Uzcudun pushover, Louis has grossed $61,000 in the last month. This is pretty fair dough for an economical young fellow who is willing to ride a bicycle.

A year and a half ago Joe was getting $5 per day for lugging Ford fenders around. But when Henry and Edsel went in for those all-steel bodies the fenders got heavier and Louis wasn't geeting any stronger, so he sought less arduous toil in the beezer-bashing business.

TO date he's dragged down $475,000 and he's just easing up toward the heavy sugar. With trust funds to the right of him and annuities to the left of him, they'll never have to run any benefits for the Barrow brown skin.

Louis will go into dead storage from now until June, when he predicts he'll smack down Max Schmeling in a shukker or so. Since Joe has been fighting on an average of every three weeks since he turned professional, he'll probably have a lot of trouble filling in his spare time and he'll undoubtedly suffer from ennui. He says he'll go on a long-delayed honeymoon with the little woman.

And, speaking of the bride, to give you a rough idea of what a chilled-steel article Joe is, he remarked to Promoter Mike Jacobs as they were walking down the aisle to the ring where Uzcudun and 20,000 people waited him in Madison Square Garden last month: "The Missus wants a fur coat for Christmas; what do you think I should get her—mink or sable?"

Turner Books Twin Feature For Mat Fans; Savoldi Returns

By George Considine.

BANKING on the theory that two negatives make a positive, Promoter Joe Turner next Thursday night will present a double-featured wrestling show at his W street punishment emporium, thus proving beyond all doubt that it never rains but it pours.

Joe Savoldi has been chartered to top the milling with Ivan Managoff, Russian scientist from Philadelphia. Brother Savoldi finds himself in disrepute locally as a result of his poor showing against Kansas City Joe Cox two weeks ago, and therefore probably will give all to regain favor.

In Managoff the former Notre Dame football star meets one of the finest scientific journeymen in the racket. His draw last Thursday with Hans Steinke, the old German mat wizard, was received by many rounds of plaudits. Ringsiders were generally agreed that the Managoff-Steinke exhibition easily stole the show.

In the other alleged feature, Promoter Turner is offering his two outstanding build-ups in Dean Detton and Jack Donovan. With the possible exception of a day in June, nothing is quite as rare as a battle of build-ups.

Donovan was brought in from Boston about this time last year, and for months thereafter won with startling regularity. The big red-haired Irish flipper finally worked or, rather, was worked, up to a title match. Thus endeth the story of Donovan. Detton's story differs in that he came from Salt Lake City and that he hasn't met the champ—yet.

Taking care of preliminary hostilities, Dr. Len Hall muscles around with Irv Comield and Fearless Floyd Marshall takes on Jim Wallis.

Barney Welsh and Mary Cootes Rated M. A. Tennis Leaders

Two District Stars Are Honored

Rockville Flash Named Over Eddie Jacobs; Breese Is Third.

By John R. Vosburgh.

TRIBUTE to Washington as the ruling tennis power of the Middle Atlantic States, was paid officially yesterday.

The Middle Atlantic Tennis Association, holding its annual banquet at the Racquet Club, proclaimed Barney Welsh as the No. 1 ranking men's player for the District, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia and then rated Mary Cootes as the No. 1 women's player.

Welsh and Miss Cootes are the top-ranking players of the District. Never before have both the top-ranking men's and women's players of the Middle Atlantic section come from Washington courts. Though Welsh is a resident of Rockville, Md., and Miss Cootes, of Alexandria, Va., their tennis residence is perenially the District.

This is also believed to be the first year that a Washington man has been the association's top-ranking choice. In reaching the No. 1 ranking, Welsh crowns a determined drive of three years to oust Eddie Jacobs, Baltimore veteran, from the top-rung. Welsh was finalist against Herb Bowman in the Old Dominion tourney, equivalent to the championship of Virginia, won the District championship and the West Virginia title at White Sulphur Springs.

Local Players Dominate.

Washington players dominated the first ten in the men's division, all but three of whom come from this city. William L. Breese, No. 2 ranking player of the District, was rated No. 3. Dooley Mitchell, Bud Markey, Hugh Lynch, Ralph McElvenny and Tony Latona were others included in the first ten.

Washington teams were ranked one-two in the doubles with Welsh and McElvenny, National Public Parks champions, getting the top rung, and Mitchell and Markey the runner-up post. Welsh and McElvenny succeeded Alphone Smith and John Wheatley, of Charlottesville and Newport News, Va., respectively.

Miss Cootes replaced Reba Kirson, of Baltimore and Warrenton, Va., as the women's pace setter. The Alexandria girl won the District championship and the Old Dominion title among other conquests.

The meeting was featured by a discussion aimed at developing junior players. On a motion by Lawrence A. Baker, who is also treasurer of the United States Lawn Tennis Association, Middle Atlantic body authorized its executive committee "to expend a sum of not more than $500 during the forthcoming year for the development of younger players."

Favors Schoolboy Event.

The delegate of the Middle Atlantic Association is to give notice of the resolution to the U. S. L. T. A. in February. Baler said he "hoped the national body would match the sum with a like amount."

Thomas J. Mangan, of Washington, was re-elected president for the third straight year. James E. Allen, of Charleston, W. Va., was elected vice president to succeed Thomas McKinley, of Charleston. W. B. Winchester, of Baltimore, was elected secretary to succeed Robert G. Cobell, of Richmond.

2 School Track Stars Invited to Vie in Meet

New York, Jan. 18 (AP).—Two of the country's outstanding interscholastic stars, Bob Dixon, of Bridgeton Academy, Me., and Bill Brown, 17-year-old youngster from Baker High School, New Orleans, have been invited to compete in the National A. A. U. high and prep school indoor track and field championship in Madison Square Garden on February 22.

Dixon, New York City high school product, equaled the world indoor 600-yard record of 1:21.4 in a handicap race in which he started from the 6-yard mark.

Lorraine Gulli Wins Stakes With Rally

Rolls Brilliant 144 Last Game to Triumph; Miss Young 2d.

LORRAINE GULLI, second ranking woman bowler in the country and the duckpin ace of the Capital, topped a field of 44 of the Nation's foremost feminine maple shooters and enriched herself by $100 in winning the fifth annual Women's Dixie sweepstakes which ended last night at the Rosslyn, Va., mapleways. Miss Gulli covered the nine-game stretch with a total pinfall of 1072.

Capital entrants made a brilliant showing in the event, taking the first four cash prizes. Lucille Young, Gulli's team-mate on the leading Rosslyn team of the South Atlantic Women's League, earned $50 by finishing second with 1066, and Catherine Quigley, the Nation's No. 1 honorary bowler, gained the third prize of $35, rolling 1055.

Christine Kirk Fourth

Christine Kirk, of Bridgeport, Conn., was fourth with 1049; Blanche Wootton, of the Rosslyn team, fifth with 1040; Ethel Brewer, of Baltimore, sixth, with 1031, and Ida Simmons, the country's first ranking duckpinnist and defending champion of the event, gained last-place money with 1028.

Gulli, apparently out of the running for the title which she had won in 1932 and 1934, was 43 pins behind Lucille Young in the fifth box of her final game, but rolled a brilliant 144 game to gain the championship. Lucille Young led all the way from the second block to the last game.

Hollis Godfrey Dies; Aided U.S. War Defenses

Author Helped Mobilize Engineer Forces for Wilson.

By the Associated Press.

Duxbury, Mass., Jan. 18.—Dr. Hollis Godfrey, 61 consulting engineer and writer on scientific subjects who co-operated in creating the Council of National Defense during the World War, died last night after a long illness.

Dr. Godfrey, born in Lynn, Mass., in 1874, was president of the Drexel Institute in Philadelphia when he joined with Elihu Root, Gen. Leonard Wood and Howard Coffin in organizing the Council of National Defense. He previously had attracted attention by his treatment of mechanical and scientific devices to be used in future wars.

During the World War he was prominent in mobilizing the engineering forces of this country in support of the war program. He was appointed in October, 1916, by President Wilson as a member of the advisory commission of the national defense council and chairman of its section on engineering and education.

He devoted most of his energies during this period to improving the co-ordination between educational institutions and military service. During 1917-18 he served as a member of the National Research Council, the Engineering Research Commission and the National Commercial Economy Board.

After the war, Dr. Godfrey resumed his work at Drexel Institute. In 1921 he was made chairman of the board and president of the Engineering Economics Foundation, with headquarters in Boston.

Educated at Tufts College, Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Dr. Godfrey pursued research in sanitary engineering methods, visiting France, England, Germany and Switzerland.

Dr. Isabel Lamb, Retired, Dies At Home Here

Dr. Isabel Haslup Lamb, widow of Dr. Daniel S. Lamb, and retired District physician, died unexpectedly yesterday at her residence, 2006 Columbia road northwest.

Dr. Lamb was born in Laurel, Md., in 1864, the daughter of Jonathan Waters and Suzanna Haslup Waters. She was a descendant of the Harrison, Powell, Minnegerode and Whitmore families, early Virginia settlers.

After graduating from the Maryland State Normal School, she entered Howard University, the only institution in the city admitting women medical students at that time. She received her M.D. from Howard in 1897.

Known in local medical circles as "Aunt Carester," she was medical inspector of the District public schools from 1903-12. Later she was on the board and staff of the woman's clinic, and served with the woman's evening clinic.

No one ever disputed her title as the first woman to drive a "horseless carriage" under license in the District. It was an electric auto.

A contributor t omedical journals, she was a member of the American Medical Association, the Medical Society of the District of Columbia and the Southern Maryland Medical Society. She retired from active practise in 1924.

Kipling May Be Given Tomb Among Westminster Immortals

Dead Poet's Wishes to Decide; Cremation of Body Ordered.

By the Associated Press.

London, Jan. 18.—Rudyard Kipling, Great Britain's poet and story teller of empire who died early today, may be buried in Westminster Abbey among the nation's greatest sons.

Kiplings' own wishes for his burial place, friends said, probably will be the only deciding factor. Throughout his life he shunned national honors, refusing knighthoods several times, and this attitude, it was pointed out, may also have led him to prefer burial in some quiet spot. Final arrangements will be made tomorrow.

The British Museum disclosed that Kipling, shortly before his death, gave it the manuscript of "Kim," probably the greatest as well as one of the most popular of his longer works.

The poet, who has been called the "favorite author of the Prince of Wales," asked the museum not to make public announcement of the gift until after his death.

He stipulated that the manuscript, a bound volume, should not be used "for purposes of collation or reproduction." Another volume of manuscript poems also was presented to the museum by Kipling.

The body will be cremated, the family has announced. It was taken to a chapel from the hospital bed where he underwent an emergency operation Monday for a perforated stomach ulcer. His American-born wife and their daughter were at the bedside when he died.

Kipling, who was 70, had lived in seclusion for many years in the village of Burwash, Sussex.

Many tributes were paid to the writer, whose tales and poems of India made him one of the world's most widely read authors of all time.

Bernard Shaw said Kipling was "a great story teller who never grew up" and a "great figure in what may be called imperialistic literature."

John Masefield, poet laureate of England, said:

"He was a story teller of genius who took the world by storm and for a whole generation remained the most popular humorist, and in some ways the most romantic writer using our tongue."

Girl Preacher Here to Launch Revival Series

Uldine UtleyTalks to Press, but Adroitly Evades Modern Issues.

Shortly after she had brakfasted yesterday yellow-haired Uldine Utley, Methodist girl evangelist, summoned, through her business manager, all the reporters who could be rounded up for a press conference.

Represetnatives of the press found the 23-year-old preacher snuggled against the cushions of a divan in the Cario Hotel's lounge, her Bible with a full-blown red rose sticking from between its pages, held in her hands.

Most of the time she held against her heart the Bible, with its rose, which made an extremely effective picture since she had on a snug fitting, white satin blouse with a brilliant green handkerchief tucked into the right shoulder pocket.

Long dark lashes swept upward from her big, cool blue eyes and silver bracelets clanked on her wrist. Variously called the Joan of Arc of the present religious world and the Garbo of the pulpit, Miss Utley looked considerably more like movie actress Joan Blondell than either of the aforementioned personages.

Her chaperone, an aunt, did not attend the conference, but near Miss Utley sat her secretary, her business manager, who insisted he "is only a nerrand boy," and Dr. Robert L. Wood, pastor of the Petworth Methodist Church, where the youngest ordained Methodist woman minister begins a four-week series of meetings tonight.

Posed Dramatically for Camera.

The little group smiled blandly while yellow-haired Uldine amazed reporters and photographers, first by her ability to squirm out from under a direct question in the equivocal manner of a polished politician, and then by her aptitude for assuming dramatic poses when the cameras were turned upon her.

But then, as her business manager pointed out, Miss Utley is right at home with photographers. While visiting her parents in Miami during the holidays she obligingly posed in a bathing suit for a news cameraman, the Bible, with its red rose, held against her chest.

Uldine was only 10, she told reporters, when she felt the call to preach. She had always been a good little girl, living on her parents' raisin ranch near Fresno, Calif., going to Sunday school and attending church services.

When she was 10, she recalled, the Lord several times sent her the message, "As ye go, preach. The kingdom of God is at hand."

"But I couldn't believe He really meant me," said Uldine, her wide eyes becoming wider than ever. "I was at war with myself, so to speak, until one night—it was a Wednesday, I remember—when I was riding on a street car. I was on my way to midweek service and had my Bible with me.

Asked One More Sigh.

I asked God to ive me one more sign. I took the Bible between my two hands and it fell open at the first chapter of Jeremiah. My eyes fell on the sixth verse."

Miss Utley yesterday opened her Bible to that same passage and read in resonant and slightly husky voice the verses which settled her fate:

"Then said I, ah Lord God, behold I cannot speak for I am a child."

"ut the Lord said unto me, 'Say not I am a child, for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak.'"

Uldine Utley has been preaching ever since. She started out as a aptist and at one time was a protege of Dr. John Roach Straton. Six years ago she decided the Methodist Episcopal Church would enable her to give greater scope to her talents.

Her days, she said smilingly, are spent in study and prayer. She never writes her sermons but speaks, she said. "Straight from my heart with this book to guide me," and she held the ible a little closer. The rose had begun to wilt in the warm almosphere of the hotel lounge.

Leads Singing at Services.

In addition to preaching evangelistic sermons she leads the singing at her services. Invariably she wears a soft blue dress when she preaches. She always has at least one meeting for men only. It is invariably well attended.

When reporters tried to draw Uldine out on her opinion of the present younger generation her replies became so enigmatic they resolved into euphamistic praise for the Christian way of life and the joy of laboring in the Lord's vineyard.

She herself does not dance nor play cards. The reporters knew better than to ask her if she smokes. When one of them inquired dubiously if she thought her life was balanced, Miss Utley answered sweetly:

"I think you can decide that better than I. Some of the most unbalanced persons don't know it themselves."

Driver Is Fined $10 In Fatal Car Crash

Enos W. Harden, 24, 1014 Urell place northeast, was acquitted on charges of driving while under the the influence of intoxicants yesterday by Judge Thomas W. Anderson, in Rockville County Police Court, at Rockville, Md. He was fined $10 for reckless driving.

J. Roy Woolard, 29, 4313 Third street northwest, was acquitted on both charges. The men were charged after a fatal accident on the Frederick pike, near Rockville, in which two persons were fatally injured.

Richard Farley, an occupant of Woolard's parked car, was burned to death after a car driven by Harnden crashed into it. David Aitcheson, a passenger in Harnden's car, died later at Montgomery County General Hospital.

Berlin Scientist Explains Space To Club Here

Dr. Kroner Contends Problem Is Philosophical One, Not Mathematical.

Speaking in terms of the philosopher, there is a Beyond to Cosmos. That abstract something called "the infinite" is merely the human inability to grasp the meaning of "space."

Dr. Richard Kroner, Berlin philosopher, whose studies in this field have won international fame, also has decided the problem of space is not a mathematical one, but is entirely in the realm of philosophy.

Before a group of several hundred men of science gathered last night at the Cosmos Club, the noted wroter and former German soldier bracketed these statements in his address on "Problems of Space from ristotle to Einstein." The address was sponsored jointly by the University of Maryland and the Washington Philosophical Society.

"Because the Cosmos is a cosmos in the mind," he explained, "it has itself an end in the mind. Beyond the boundaries of knowableness the psysical cosmos ceases."

He continued by saying that mind is a tie between space and that which is contained in space; that things in space are also in the mind; and that the essence of space is something spiritual.

"The nature of space excludes possibility of finding something new. The cosmic character of space demands that it be open and endless. Intellect can govern the whole special structure."

Dr. Kroner's further explanation of the difference between space and cosmos was that "the cosmos finds its end at consciousness, in and at the mind, it ends absolutely, not in space, but at the same time as the space it physically fills."

5 PM is a test of how you FEEL

"How do I feel.... Rotten! why do you ask?"

"Because, you are not yourself!"

IT is all so simple, too! That tired, run-down, exhausted feeling quite often is due to lack of a sufficiency of those precious red-blood-cells. Just build up these oxygen-carrying cells and the whole body takes on new life... food is really turned into energy and strength... you can't help but feel and look better. S.S.S. Tonic restores deficient red-blood-cells... it also improves the appetite and digestion. It has been the nation's standby for over 100 years... and unless your case is exceptional it should help you, too. Insist on S.S.S. Tonic in the blood-red cellophane-wrapped package. The big 20-oz. size is sufficient for two weeks' treatment... it's more economical.

Governor Herring Enters Senate Race

Des Moines, Iowa, Jan. 18 (AP).—Gov. Clyde L. Herring today announced he would be a candidate for the Democratic Party's nomination for United States Senator from Iowa in 1936.

Herring, now serving his second two-year term as Governor, will seek to succeed Iowa's senior Senator, Lester J. Dickinson, a Republican, whose term expires next year.

Dickinson, foe of the Democratic national Administration, and keynoter of the last Republican national convention, is expected to seek renomination.

Gov. Herring is a stanch supporter of the New Deal and of President Roosevelt.

Letters Asking Seeds Met by Tuneful 'No'

The Agriculture Department yesterday said, "No, a thousand times no," it wasn't going to give away fall seeds and there was no point in writing for them.

In a special press release, bearing part of the recent popular song title in its caption, it said the flow of the "free seed" letters was beginning again, but added hopefully that indications were that the number would be fewer than last year.

Congress stopped appropriating money for free seeds 13 years ago. Yet that doesn't stop thousands from writing each spring for one of the brightly colored little packets, the department said, adding it has no seeds or plants for sale, either.

Community Work Told at Luncheon

Miss Hester B. Crutcher, director of the delinquency unit of the United States Children's Bureau, yesterday described for 27 representatives of the Neighborhood Council of Washington the work being accomplished through the council movement in Los Angeles.

Miss Crutcher came to the Capital recently from the West Coast. She reported lay workers are being used extensively and with great success in Los Angeles.

Dr. Thomas W. Gosling presided at the luncheon meeting, held at the Y. W. C. A. Reports were heard concerning the work of the five councils already established here. Plans are going forward to establish one in the Northeast area.

The purpose of the group is to bring together in a common cause for the good of the community the civic, fraternal and religious bodies in each neighborhood.

Capital Artists Ready to Stage Ball Rehearsal

Dress Parade at Willard Tonight Ends Work on Bal Boheme.

Washington's Bal Boheme, the thirteenth annual carnival ball of artists in the Capital City, is "ready to go" tomorrow night at the Willard Hotel. Tonight, the deadline on preliminary preparations will be reached with the dress rehearsal in the big ballroom.

All day and far into the night the committee on decorations, headed by Raymond Mentzer and Junior Brooke Todd, and the lighting committee, headed by Beverley Harris and assisted by Harold Snyder with other electrical experts, will labor in setting up the huge murals, the hangings and the extra equipment needed for the spectacular effects planned as pageant episodes.

"The Lost Opal," written by William S. Hepner for the performance beginning shortly after 11 o'clock on Monday night, will be directed by Mrs. Marie Moore Forrest, with Mrs. Maud Howell Smith and Dennis Connell as assistants on casting and dramatic action, and Misses Marian Chace, Helen Griffith, Alice Louise Hunter, Virginia Hunter, Judy Lyeth, Donna Taggart, Marion Venable and Marjorie Webster as dance directors.

More than 150 leading exponents of the arts in Washington will take part in the pageant, a kaleidescopic melange of superstition, intermingled with the story of a bridegroom's gift of an heirloom to his lovely bride, and the theft of the opal by a band of gnomes. Unhappiness, and weird happenings follow fast upon the theft of the opal, with fishermen, mountain folk, black cats, peacocks, wood nymphs, wraiths and other beings following one another in riotous rapidity until, finally, the fairy band appears to save the situation and return the opal.

The Bal Boheme committee announces that tickets are on sale at all leading hotels. The price, $5, includes supper.

Rep. Lundeen Asks Substitute Security Law

Speaker Tells Cosmos Club Administration Bill Is Inadequate.

Declaring the Administration's social security act is "utterly inadequate," Representative Ernest Lundeen, of Minnesota, speaking yesterday at a Cosmos Club luncheon, urged a new law, based on "definite and fundamental principles."

"The law must be national in scope, payments must be made from the Federal Treasury, and funds collected from income, inheritance, gifts, corporation reserves and other accumulated wealth of the country," he said.

The Congressman pointed out that the present act makes no provision for the jobless. "The unemployed must first secure jobs. They must hold these jobs and pay a percentage out of their meager salaries for years before they are eligible."

The constitutionality of the act was described as "exceedingly doubtful" in view of recent Supreme Court decisions.

Gardner Jackson, former assistant consumers' counsel for the AAA, who also spoke, urged an investigation of facts on processing and distributing costs in the food industries. Benjamin C. Marsh, executive secretary for the Peoples Lobby, reported on legislation pending in Congress.

Gov. Welford Will Run Again in North Dakota

Bismark, N. D., Jan. 18 (AP).—Gov. Wolter Welford, who gained office when Thomas H. Moodie was disqualified, today announced he would be a candidate to succeed himself.

Welford, a Republican, was elected lieutenant governor. The State Supreme Court ruled Moodie, a Democrat, disqualified because he had not lived in the State five consecutive years before his election.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, JANUARY 19, 1936 — B

Roosevelt Regains December Loss in National Poll; Now 53%

But Congress Session Often Causes Decline

This Fact May Influence Republicans to Seek as Late Adjournment as Possible, With an Eye to Strategic Effects.

By Dr. George Gallup
American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, Jan. 18.—Four new facts about Franklin D. Roosevelt's political position today are revealed in the January poll of the American Institute of Public Opinion, which has tested the President's standing with the voters every month for nearly two years. The four facts are:

1. In this month's poll the President regained the slight loss in popular support which he was shown to have suffered in the December poll. He would now receive 53 per cent of the vote of the two major parties if an election were held today, the January poll shows. Last month his majority was 52.6 per cent.

2. Four States with a total electoral vote of 101 have dropped out of the Democratic column in the two-month period since last November, when one of the 23 previous polls on the President's standing was taken by the American Institute of Public Opinion. The four States are: Illinois, Michigan, New York, and Colorado.

This leaves the Democrats leading in 31 States today, against 35 last November.

3. But the Republicans have not won all four States that dropped out of the Democratic camp. Reason: Three of them—Michigan, New York and Colorado, with a combined electoral vote of 72—now squat on the fence, voting 50 per cent Republican, 50 per cent Democratic. Last month New York was the only State on the fence. Michigan and Colorado are newcomers.

The fourth State which slipped through Jim Farley's fingers—Illinois—joined the Republican camp last month, as was reported in these columns. This month it is still there.

4. The fact that the President's total popular majority rose from 52.6 per cent to 53 per cent while a number of States were dropping out of the Democratic column appears paradoxical but is easily explained.

The President's gains during the month were made principally in States where he did not need greater popular support, particularly in the South. His majority in Georgia, for instance, has increased two points since December, possibly as a result of the Atlanta speech.

Were tomorrow the fateful third of November, President Roosevelt would be re-elected without serious difficulty if he carried the 31 States now Democratic. This would give him 278 electoral votes or 12 more than the number necessary for re-election.

However, five of the 31 States—Minnesota, Kansas, Wyoming, Wisconsin and South Dakota—are so-called "borderline" Democratic States where the President's majority hovers between 51 per cent and 53 per cent. A change of three points in those States would shove all but one out of the Democratic column and drastically alter the fortunes of the Democratic Party.

Westward Tide of Republicanism

The tide of Republicanism, welling up in New England and the North Atlantic States, is moving westward north of the Ohio River, although at present it has not progressed far enough to cause the Democrats deep anxiety.

In the poll last November the tide had reached Ohio and Indiana, which are now "borderline" Republican States, Then in the following month—December—Illinois was swirled into the tide, which continued to eddy westward.

This month it moved with gathering momentum into Michigan and Wisconsin. Michigan, which had been Democratic by a small margin, dropped down to the 50-50 line. Wisconsin which had been definitely Democratic (more than 53 per cent for Roosevelt), became "borderline" Democratic (between 51 per cent and 53 per cent for Roosevelt).

Now the G. P. O. tide has run up against an obstacle in its path—the rock of Iowa, which remains definitely Democratic in this poll, probably because of its loyalty to the lately demolished AAA.

In Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota the defection from Roosevelt is greater today, when compared to the 1932 election, than in any other contiguous group of States in the Union.

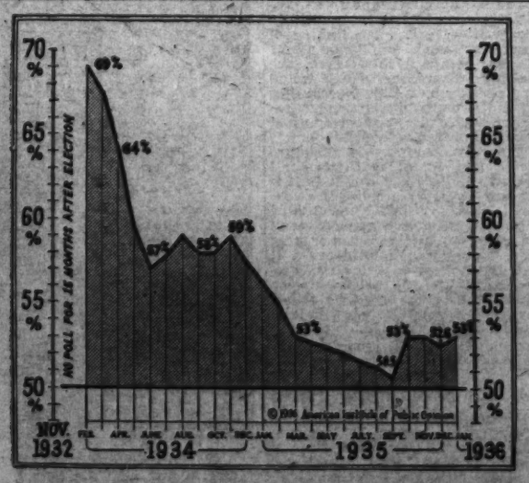
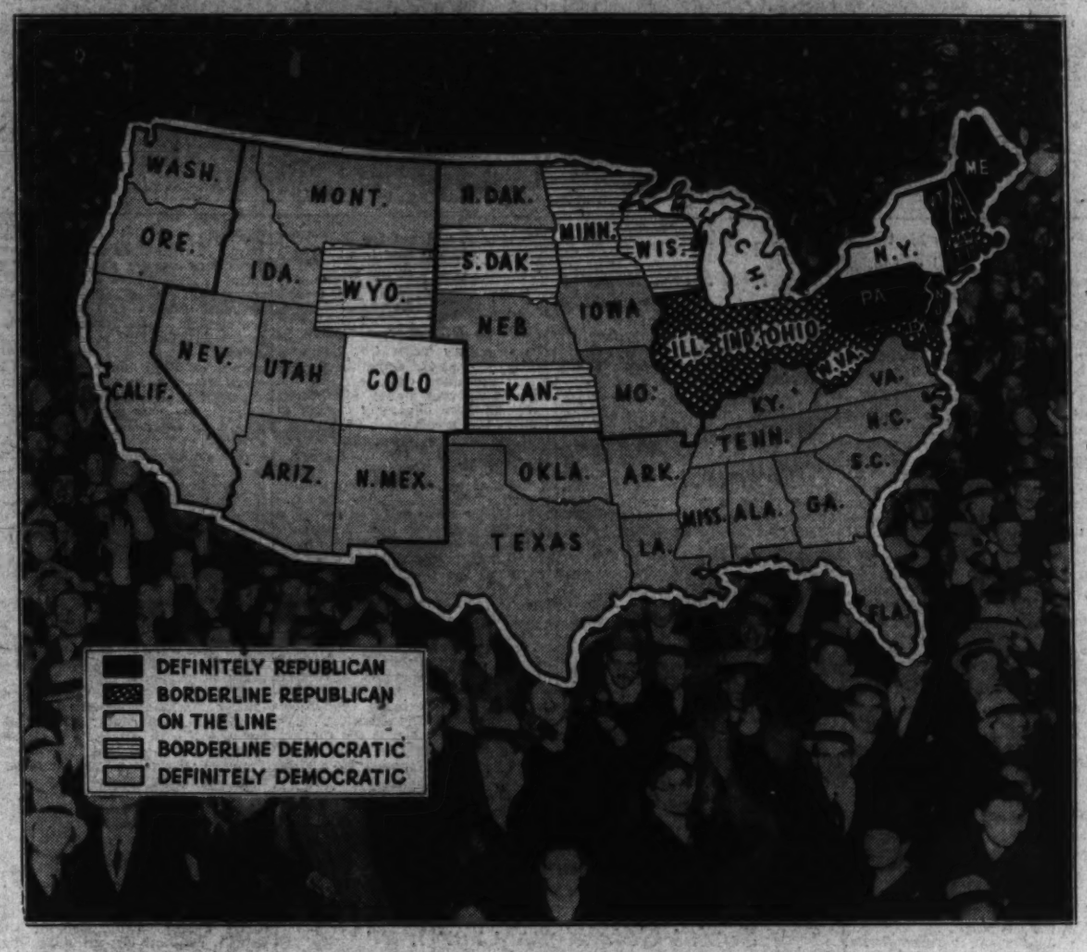
PERCENTAGE DEMOCRATIC

State	January Poll	1932 Election	Points Chang
Wisconsin	52%	67%	—15
Minnesota	51	62	—11
South Dakota	53	65	—12
North Dakota	56	71	—15

To be sure, not all of this defection has been absorbed by the Republican Party; some went to the third party movement which is relatively stronger in this area than elsewhere. But an increase in Republican strength accounts for a large proportion of the defection.



How the States Vote This Month



The tide of Republicanism is moving slowly westward north of the Ohio River, although it has a long way to go before it will seriously threaten the Democrats. Sorest spots for the Democrats today are Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota which would drop into the Republican column by a shift of from one to three points in Roosevelt's majority. Above map describes the political situation only as of today, and much can happen to change it between now and November.

Democrats Lead in 31 States Today

Maine is the most Republican State in the Union today, and Mississippi the most Democratic. Thirteen States would go as Maine goes if tomorrow were election day, and 30 would go as Mississippi goes. Score: Republicans 14; Democrats 31.

This accounts for 45 States. The remaining three, New York, Michigan and Colorado, unable to decide whether to ride the donkey or the elephant, sit on the fence and watch. Their voters are 50% Republican, 50% Democratic in this month's poll.

States in which President Roosevelt would receive less than 47% of the combined major party vote if an election were held today have been listed as definitely Republican at this time.

Borderline Republican States are those in which the President's strength is between 47% and 50%. Borderline Democratic States are those in which his majority is between 50% and 53%.

All States in which his majority is greater than 53% have been listed as definitely Democratic at this time.

Four States Quit Fold Despite Other Gains

Michigan and Colorado Join New York on Fence; Illinois Stays in Republican Column; Majority in Georgia Rises.

During the last two years President Roosevelt's popularity declined while Congress was in session, increased after Congress went home.

This phenomenon, first brought to light by the National Weekly Poll during the course of its 24 monthly tests of the President's popular strength, may be observed in the following facts:

The President's majority in the weekly poll fell from 69 per cent to 57 per cent during the congressional session of 1934, but turned upward rapidly after Congress adjourned in June of that year.

Similarly, in 1935 the President lost six points during the congressional session of January to August, but immediately gained ground after the national legislators went home.

Now that Congress is sitting once more it would appear to be the strategy of the Democrats to bring about a short, peaceful session and the strategy of the Republicans to work for a long session.

When Congress is framing legislation the President and his Democratic teammates are, in a sense, "carrying the ball," while the Republicans have only to wait for fumbles and take advantage of the "breaks."

* * * *

Young Voters "The destiny of youth becomes the destiny of America," said President Roosevelt in his Jackson Day speech. "It is the sacred duty of us who are vested with the responsibility of leadership to justify the expectations of the young men and women of America"

This appeal to youth is of particular political interest because, next to persons on relief, young voters are the most solidly Democratic group in the Nation today. They vote 65 per cent for Roosevelt in the poll this month.

Reliefers continue to give their support to the President this month, voting 77 per cent in his favor. Last month the vote was also 77 per cent. From this it would seem important for the Democrats to get the voters in the lower income groups to the polls on election day, rain or shine.

* * * *

Horse Race Since the National Weekly Poll first brought out the fact some weeks ago, it has become a political axiom that the President is more popular than his policies. One proof of this was found by the American Institute of Public Opinion last March in a poll which asked voters, on the same ballot, whether they approved of the acts and policies of Roosevelt's first two years, and whether they would vote for him today.

The replies were only 44 per cent in favor of the New Deal, but 53 per cent in favor of Roosevelt.

Yet polls on specific New Deal policies reveal that not all aspects of the New Deal are unpopular. Only last week the Weekly Poll reported that national sentiment was nine to one in favor of old age pensions—a cornerstone of New Deal "social security."

The NRA, on the other hand, was shown to have been unpopular in a poll completed by the American Institute of Public Opinion one week before the Blue Eagle's feathers were plucked by the Supreme Court last May. Likewise the Nation voted against the AAA in a poll reported the day before the Supreme Court demolished this New Deal measure.

At present the one thing about the New Deal that appears to worry voters most is the amount of Government spending for relief and recovery, which is fast becoming one of the leading issues of the campaign.

Secretary Morgenthau is said to be pulling the President toward the right, toward reduced spending. Harry Hopkins is said to be pulling him toward the left, toward continued spending for relief. At present a majority of the voters is on the side of Secretary Morgenthau, as shown in a poll by the American Institute of Public Opinion reported last October. At that time three voters in every five felt the Government was spending too lavishly for relief and recovery.

From now on, so far as the Democrats are concerned it will be a kind of horse race between the issue of Government spending on the one hand, and the policy of laying Federal cash on the line for the forgotten man. Will abandoning or curtailing relief expenditures lose the Democrats more votes than continuing to run up deficits upon which the public apparently frowns?

* * * *

Defection Elected in 1932 by 59 per cent of the voters of the two major parties, President Roosevelt would receive 53 per cent today, according to this month's poll—a decline of six points.

In what sections has the defection taken place?

Judging by the results of this month's poll, it had been spread fairly evenly over the whole country with the exception of the West Central States. Curiously the defection was greater in this farming section, where millions of AAA dollars were spent to help farmers, than in New England which is now the stronghold of Republicans.

Below is a table comparing the Democratic vote in the 1932 elections, by sections:

	% Democratic Jan. Poll	1932 Election	Pts. Chg.
New England	45%	51%	—6
Mid. Atlantic	48	53	—5
East Central	48	55	—7
West Central	54	63	—9
South	70	76	—6
Mountain	56	60	—4
Pacific	57	61	—4

Note that although the defection was greatest in the West Central section (Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and the Dakotas) this area as a whole still votes for Roosevelt by a comfortable margin (54 per cent).

F.D.R. 'Best Man In Sight'—Voters

In explaining why they are for or against President Roosevelt, voters in this month's poll generally put forward the following reasons, which are typical of thousands of comments tabulated:

For Roosevelt

1. "He has helped the common man—the first President in recent years to do so."
2. "He may have made mistakes, but he has done his best."
3. "He is the best man in sight for the job of bringing us back to prosperity."

Against Roosevelt

1. "I'm against the New Deal."
2. "The Democrats are spending too much money and putting us too deeply in debt."
3. "Roosevelt is bad for business."

Button From Uniform Of Lord Nelson Owned

Madison, Wis. (U.P.).—A button from the clothing of Lord Nelson, England's greatest naval hero, is treasured here by the Misses Alice and Bettina Jackson, sisters of a widely known family of physicians.

The button, first held by Joseph Hobbins, maternal ancestor of the Jacksons, has been handed down from generation to generation. Hobbins, attempting to settle here in 1853 with his wife, was repelled by crude pioneer conditions and returned to England.

Next Week . . .

If, on some dark and lonely night, the City of Baton Rouge, La., were surrounded by a murderous band of ruffians and every one of its 30,000-odd inhabitants killed, a furious public would demand immediate redress for such frightful carnage.

During the year 1935, 36,400* persons—considerably more than the population of Baton Rouge—were killed in automobile accidents in the United States. Another 864,000*—a little more than the population of St. Louis—were injured.

How far is the public, which would be shocked at the sudden annihilation by death of a whole city, willing to go in preventing death from stalking the highways every day?

Does the public favor putting "governors" in all cars to prevent speeds greater than 50 miles an hour?

Would it approve painting stripes or signs on cars whose drivers have been at fault in accidents?

The National Weekly Poll of Public Opinion has put these and other questions to the people of the Nation in a poll on measures for preventing automobile accidents.

The results will be published next Sunday exclusively in The Washington Post.

The News of the Week Passes in Brief Review

National Affairs

Munitions

Nye Causes Explosion

Early in the week Senator Gerald P. Nye was apologizing to newspapermen for putting on such a dull show with his committee hearings investigating the forces that led the United States into the World War. Before the week was much older, however, the little man from North Dakota was making news aplenty, but of a sort nobody bargained for.

Typical of the early week boredom was the revelation, which papers tried hard to get excited about, that President Woodrow Wilson in 1915 distrusted Count Bernstorff, the German Ambassador. It just happens that this fact had been a matter of public knowledge, to anybody that cared to dig into published World War histories, for ten years or more.

Then in mid-week Nye suddenly made front page again with the charge that Wilson in 1919 testified falsely before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee when he said that before going to the Paris peace conferences he had no knowledge of Allied agreements to divide up conquered Germany. Nye said he had it on highest authority that Wilson did have prior knowledge of those secret treaties.

This didn't seem on the face of it to prove a whole lot, but it served to send Virginia's skinny, aged, vitriol-tongued Carter Glass into a towering rage. Said Glass on the Senate floor Friday, pounding his desk until his fist bled:

"If it were permissible under the rules of the Senate to say that any man who degrades the character and integrity of Woodrow Wilson is a coward, I would say it."

Senators James P. Pope, of Idaho, and W. F. George, of Georgia, members of the Munitions Committee, had virtually walked out on Nye when he made the Wilson charges. All of that, plus the fact that the committee's $125,000 appropriation has run out, makes continuance of Nye's inquisitioning much longer look pretty doubtful.

Farm

Law Is Ready-Made

A goodish lead for a down-to-earth story on the much-tangled AAA - farm - program-what-next-in-Washington story could well begin:

"The music goes round and round, oh-ho-oh-ho-ho-oh, and it hasn't come out yet."

For the spat-wearing farm chiefs who assembled in Washington, the brow-creased New Dealers, the millions of expectant farm families, the politicians preparing to make political capital of the farm situation, the lawyer busily working on means of collection of millions of processing taxes impounded in escrow, the Congressmen, and the general newspaper-reading public—all were kept more or less agog throughout the week in making and watching the developments of the Administration's answer to the Supreme Court decision which killed the AAA.

As the week went on in day after day jammed with developments, this simple outline formed in the proceedings:

The Administration, at first determined on a program of new legislation replacing the AAA with a plan which would involve soil conservation, soil erosion control, benefit payments on conditional grants to farmers, and land rentals, suddenly discovered through the alertness of two newspapermen that such an act embodying everything but crop control was already on the books and needed but slight expansion to serve as a complete substitute for the AAA.

The names of this hitherto obscure and meagerly-noticed statute, the soil conservation act of 1935, and of the Soil Conservation Service, were suddenly blazoned on the farm horizon, and the Administration greeted the discovery with ill-concealed huzzas.

For this little act actually grants the Executive great powers to improve the land of the Nation through checking soil erosion, and indirectly provides a method similar to benefit payments by Government land rentals.

As a result, by the end of the week the raw material for legislation was being whipped into shape under midnight lamps by AAA experts, including Howard Tolley, soil conservation "wizard," hastily summoned to Washington after the death of AAA. While the farm chiefs continued meeting in Washington their councils were unattended and their counsels seemed doomed to fall on heedless ears as the Administration pushed forward toward swift emergency legislation.

In the Senate and House Agriculture committees legislators moved through toward enactment a $300,000,000 appropriation to pay off the Government's "moral obligation" to farmers signing 1935 adjustment contracts.

Meanwhile Comtroller General John R. McCarl, stern guardian of the Nation's purse strings, was alternately chilling and cheering the hearts of 6,500 AAA employes and 2,500 Treasury employes formerly engaged in AAA tax work. His final ruling allowed them to get their mid-month pay checks.

Politics

Takes to the Air

Politics took to the air, the stump and the pulpit last week and it was a virtual toss up as to which ring of the national circus offered most entertainment.

Chairman Henry P. Fletcher of the Republican National Committee howled with rage and pain all week at the way he was abused by the radio broadcasting companies, and every howl brought a few more hundred acres of first-class newspaper publicity to salve his wounds.

On Monday Fletcher revealed that both the National and Columbia Broadcasting companies had refused to let the Republican Party buy time to present its side of politics in a series of dramatic skits. Fletcher declared that this was an infringement of freedom of the air. He hinted broadly that the Democrats controlled the Government and that the Government regulates the issuance of radio broadcasting licenses. This made lots of good newspaper copy.

The presidents of the two networks immediately released the letters in which they had turned down the skits. They said, in effect, that they didn't approve of presenting political questions on the "emotional" plane of fictionized drama. They promised to give air time to both parties for straight-away political discussion and to sell time—but not for drama—after the party conventions this spring.

Fletcher accused the systems of giving the Democrats more time than the Republicans, and C. B. S. replied that by actual count in the last few weeks Republicans had used its facilties more often than Democrats. The upshot of it all was that by the time the skits were broadcast from WGN, station of the strongly Republican Chicago Tribune, the public was really interested to hear the program.

It was a bitter pill Fletcher in Washington that his radio set wouldn't pick up the Chicago station, but the skit was printed widely in the papers next day. Later in the week Time magazine, in its March of Time program, included an act from the drama in which a young couple applied for a marriage license and the clerk rather surprisingly asked them what they planned to do about the national debt.

This stumped them completely and after the Republican view of the national debt and taxes had been fully explained they decided marriage was a bad idea.

Democratic National Chairman James A. Farley took the stump in New York and came out flat-footedly against turning the Government over to "self professed gangsters of big business." By way of a feeler for a campaign slogan he tried this one: "Keep Roosevelt in, and keep the gang out."

In Oklahoma City, Col. Theodore Roosevelt took the stump to assail the "demagoguery" of the New Deal, liken AAA crop controls to Hitler edicts and label Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace an "unbalanced fanatic."

At Lincoln, Nebr., the new Herbert Hoover took the stump and outlined a farm plan, by which "agriculture can get back on to solid ground from the quicksand of the New Deal."

In New York City, the Rev. M. J. Divine, whose colored following is divided as to whether he is actually God or just almost, took to the pulpit to launch his International Righteous Government League, which, according to its manifesto, is 100 per cent back of the Constitution and favors abolition of the greeting "Hello" and substitution for it of the word "Peace."

While it wasn't especially exciting, one of the most significant political events of the week was an attack on Senator William E. Borah, by Nicholas Murray Butler, pompous, paunchy president of Columbia University and a Republican stalwart for half a century. His attitude was felt to be indicative of how Eastern leaders and the Liberty League feel about the Idaho lone wolf's candidacy for the Republican nomination.

Court

Object of Attacks

President Roosevelt has appointed Prof. Charles A. Beard, Columbia University historian, as chairman of arrangements for the celebration of the United States Constitution's sesquicentennial anniversary. This is rather more than likely to be made much of before it is over, for the learned professor is outspoken with his unorthodox views on the Constitution and its Supreme Court guardians.

He has consistently maintained that the Supreme Court has wrongfully arrogated to itself the power to veto acts of Congress and he said as much in a speech here last week. While he was reiterating that the Constitution nowhere expressly gives the court this power, that venerable body was the subject of a variety of other attacks.

In Philadelphia one P. T. Vinson, a realtor, brought a suit to have the Supreme Court declare unconstitutional its own declaration that the late AAA was unconstitutional. It took a Federal district court just two minutes to toss Mr. Vinson out but he said that was all right because he would get to the Supreme Court that much sooner.

Early in the week a hundred House members were reported to be rallying behind Representative Oliver Harlan Cross, Texas Democrat, and his bill to limit the court's jurisdiction pretty much to suits brought by States. Such a bill was passed shortly after the Civil War—and the Supreme Court declared it unconstitutional.

Senator George W. Norris, Nebraska Republican, whose pride and joy is the court-threatened Tennessee Valley power development scheme, was one of many last week airing views hostile to the court. Indications were that the drive for a legislative curb or constitutional amendment might reach serious proportions if the nine old men junk the TVA in their decision expected tomorrow.

Raskob

Assails Tax Action

Friday a week ago mild, soft-spoken Herman Oliphant, general counsel of the United States Treasury, precipitated an income tax action that reverberated through last week's news columns and probably will reecho throughout the entire Presidential campaign.

John J. Raskob, former Santa Claus to the Democratic Party and chairman of its national committee, is an active supporter of the American Liberty League. So is Pierre S. du Pont, whose family is reported to have gone a long way toward subsidizing the Liberty League with contributions of $180,000 or thereabouts. The Liberty League is out to defeat President Roosevelt at the polls next November, if not in the courts before then.

So when the Roosevelt Administration in the year of election 1936 went before the Board of Tax Appeals charging Raskob and du Pont with conniving in 1929 to establish fictitious stock market losses, to evade income tax payments, the opposition was bound to cry politics. The Raskob version of what happened in 1929:

He and du Pont made money on the stock market before the crash and this went on the profit side of their books as taxable income. After the crash they were holding stocks that had shrunk tremendously in value. Now, to get the loss this shrinkage represented onto their books as an offset to their previous profits, it was necesary to sell the stock. They were afraid to dump $4,500,000 worth of stock on the sagging market: the effect might have ben disastrous. So each sold the other approximately that amount of stock at then current market prices "to register the loss."

Then, after the 60 days prescribed by statute, Raskob and du Pont bought back from each other the same securities at the then reigning, and substantially altered, market prices. It was not permited to establish a loss on any securities and then buy them back within 60 days.

The whole transaction was within the law, said Raskob, and moreover the Bureau of Internal Revenue was fully acquainted with the circumstances at the time.

The Treasury version of its suit against du Pont:

The deal was only a pretended sale to establish a fictitious loss under an agreement prearranged so that neither "was to derive any actual profit nor suffer any actual loss." In November, 1929, the suit alleges, Raskob drew a check for $4,582,750 on a bank in which his balance was $22,000 and gave it to du Pont in payment for the stock. Then, it is alleged, du Pont wrote a check to Raskob, in payment for stock, for $4,606,000, which Raskob deposited to meet the check he had given du Pont. Finally, says the suit, Raskob and du Pont the following January swapped checks of $5,289,500 and $5,254,125, respectively, and swapped the stock back, too.

The Treasury claims Du Pont was out no money on the deal, had the same securities he started with, but showd a loss of $2,897,000 on his income tax returns. So they are suing him for the income tax on this amount, about $500,000.

Relief

Mayors Ask 2 Billion

A big story that created scarcely a ripple in its wake splashed front pages in mid-week—the demand of the United States Conference of Mayors, meeting in Washington, for $2,340,000,000 to provide work for the needy idle.

The mayors of eight big cities gathered in the gloomy red-brick house on Jackson place and quickly drafted, under the fierce black eyes of Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia of New York City, a program that would call for this tremendous sum over and beyond the amount carried over in the President's budget of $1,103,000,000 for "recovery and relief." They estimated 3,000,000 needy jobless must be provided for.

The program was carried over the President's head directly to Speaker Byrns and Vice President Garner by Mayor LaGuardia. That was the last anyone heard of it.

Financing

RFC Spurs Bankers

The program of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to reduce interest rates on refinancing in order to spur the movement of credit moved forward with sharp effect last week.

First Chairman Jesse Jones of the RFC made a strong address in Baltimore in which he warned the banks that the Government would continue lending privately until the banks themselves provided "a free flow of credit" with reasonable interest rates to the "small fellow" as well as the "big fellow."

The tall, massive, silver-haired chairman, who has a brand-new joke ready for newsmen at each of his weekly press conferences, declared that business could not be carried on without a free flow of credit based upon a "going country."

Then he followed his words with action during the week directly illustrating his point. He announced the RFC would back a $100,000,000 refunding issue at 4 per cent after the bankers had balked at such a low rate. If the Interstate Commerce Commission approves the plan, the road will offer this huge sum in convertible refunding bonds to its stock and bond holders at 4 per cent, with the RFC agreeing to purchase any not taken.

The next day Jones announced conclusion of a reorganization agreement among security holders of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois railroad, with a new first mortgage issue for $15,000,000 at 4 per cent included.

Day after that he let the bankers aid the Maine Central railroad at 4 per cent on a refinancing plan involving $20,000,000.

Bonus

Deficit Angle Cited

Early last week Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau called in to testify before the Senate Finance Committee hearings on the soldiers' bonus bill, presented a gloomy picture. It was like this, he said:

Deficit for 1936-37 under President Roosevelt's budget message, $1,500,000,000; relief appropriation to be asked later, $2,000,000,000; immediate payment of the bonus, if voted, $2,000,000,000.

Result, a five and a half billion dollar rise in the Government deficit by the end of the 1936-37 fiscal year.

Add this to $5,800,000,000 Treasury refunding operations coming due soon, and the grand total result would be $11,300,000,000 Treasury borrowing within the next 18 months.

The finance committee, to the united whip cracking of whips by leaders of the three big veterans' associations, voted 15 to 2 in favor of the bill to pay the bonus. Late yesterday, however, the Senate, after long debate, put off until tomorrow its vote on the measure.

Business

Bank Earnings Low

It was a doldrums week in business and finance. Much of the financial page space went to long recounts of the proceedings at national bank meetings and other annual bank meetings, and all of it pretty deadly reading for the average reader, and not too inspiriting for even those versed in the jargon of the markets and the street.

A few nuggets from the week's news:

William C. Potter, chairman of the Guaranty Trust Co., declared that as long as the demand for bank credit remained curtailed and the surplus reserves stayed high, bank earnings were obviously certain to stay at low levels.

Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the Chase National Bank, and Harry E. Ward, chairman of the Irving Trust Co., came out cautiously for properly timed steps to reduce excess reserves in order to facilitate credit control, with less disturbance to business than if action were postponed until credit inflation was definitely on the way. James H. Perkins, chairman of the National City Bank, told shareholders much the same thing.

Despite these grey-colored statements, reports as a whole contained admissions of recoveries on account of loans and investments previously charged off which had been added to reserves with much immediate improvement of the situation.

It also appeared that the market values of investments acquired in prior years had moved to higher levels.

Bank deposits as a whole for 1935 had swelled, reports newly released said, until they were nearly double the total dollars in the vaults at the end of 1933. The country's 25 largest banks had $17,087,774,717 on deposit at the end of 1935, against $14,730,309,149 for 1934 and $11,686,611,283 for 1933.

Chase National Bank held top place with resources crossing the two-billion-dollar mark for a new high.

Hopeful auguries of the future were also discerned in the issuance of complete tabulations of all the capital financing done in the United States markets during 1935. The emission of stock and bond issues was sharply improved during the year to such an extent that most financial writers agreed it was the best year since 1930, despite the fact that most of the flotations were refinancing operations at lower interest rates to reduce charges on funded debts.

The total was $4,747,000,000, as against $1,053,000,000 for 1933, for instance.

Other glad news notes: Chain store trade was the best in five years during December; the world's shipbuilding construction was up 30 per cent during the last quarter; and the average man's net income was nearly 10 per cent better on December 1, 1935, than on the same day a year earlier, according to statisticians.

Anti-Pollyanna note: The cost of living rose six-hundredths of one per cent during the period from November to December, with a total year's rise of 5 per cent over 1934.

Foreign Affairs

Africa

War Sticks in Mud

A few weeks ag othere were 105 foreign newspaper correspondents in the little Ethiopian capital of Addis Ababa. Last week the corps had dwindled to 14 and three photographers. In other words, it's not the war it once was.

One thing that has slowed things up, and cheered the natives, is the premature arrival of the "little rains" which have stalled Italian operations in the north, where at latest reports native forces had cut the Italian line of communications between Adowa and Makale and completely reoccupied Tembien Province. On the southern front, however, the Italians reported a 40-mile advance in heavy fighting. The situation appears only negligibly changed, with the prospects for action in the near future dependent almost entirely on the uncertain weather.

Interesting items were that the invaders had taken to the air again and were busily engaged in bombing ant-hills under the impression they were native huts. On the subject of bombs, Maj. Gerald Burgoyne, head of a British Red Cross unit reportedly destroyed from the air, telegraphed the Addis Ababa Red Cross:

"Wake up Geneva. It is evident that the Italians are making special targets of Red Cross." There was the usual week's crop of atrocity reports, all subject to suspicion of being propaganda.

With the League of Nations sanctions committee meeting tomorrow at Geneva, the center of war interest shifts to Europe. The best guess seems to be that Britain and France will duek oil sanctions and wind the issues up hopelessly in the red tape of committees and subcommittees and endless inquiries and reports.

But on the other hand both Britain and France are massing their naval power in the Mediterranean and are coolly making war preparations with a minimum of fuss. A special meeting of the imperial defense committee of the British cabinet last Monday dispatched the home fleet on a "spring cruise" toward what Dictator Benito Mussolini's ancestors used to call, and what Mussolini hopes some day himself to call, "our sea." On Tuesday the defense committee ordered night aerial maneuvers over London, making no secret that they were part of defense preparations against possible Italian bombing attacks.

The same day France started 14 fast submarines for the Mediterranean, to be followed shortly by her whole Atlantic fleet.

Meanwhile, reports of mounting popular unrest under the pinch of sanctions leaked out of Italy. Mussolini's subjects were plainly getting restless over the bogging down of the military campaign in Africa and reports of troop desertions and draft dodging were frequent.

Parley

The Japanese Walk Out

The five-power naval limitation conference at London came to its inevitable sad end last week. Japan repeated her demand for naval strength parity and one after the other American, British, French and Italian delegates refused to accept it and their speeches were funeral orations. Japan handed in a written resignation.

Early in the week there had been rumors that Japan would make some concession from fear that otherwise the United States might fortify the Aleutian and Philippine Islands and that Britain might build a powerful base at Hongkong. In fact, for days before the breakup the conference had been an off-again - on - again proposition with Japan jockeying to get into a position where she could quit the conference without seeming to break it up.

The conference opened December 2 in an atmosphere as pessimistic as that in which it closed. With it ended all hope of continuance of the naval ratio system inaugurated at the Washington conference in 1922, the only effective disarmament move of the post war era.

The other four delegations agreed to put the best possible face on the matter and continue the parley as though it meant anything without Japan. It was indicated they might invite Germany to join in later.

France

Laval Carries On

Premier Pierre Laval of France, short, swart, black-haired and the supplest of politicians, squeezed by last week with another vote of confidence as the Chamber of Deputies reconvened after the Christmas holiday. Since the present sessions began last November, the Laval government has been holding on by the skin of its teeth.

Laval's margin in a test vote just before Christmas was only 20; last week it was 63. But the victory in each case was much in the nature of a temporary respite and resulted from a split in the Radical Socialist ranks. The vote this time was on Laval's refusal to accept debate on his foreign or domestic policy, a debate he can scarcely avoid after his return from the League of Nations Council meeting this week.

The uncertainties in the French political, and therefore, financial, situation are increased by the fact that it is an election year. Laval seeks to set the vote which will return a new Chamber of Deputies as early as possible, perhaps by March 22. As for foreign policy, it is reporter he intends to keep his hands, which got burned in the Hoare-Laval peace plan to dismember Ethiopia, strictly off the African war for a while.

Cuba

Counts Votes Slowly

Friday a week ago Cuba held a long awaited and much postponed general election, with, as one commentator remarked, no more disturbance than if the balloting had been in Kentucky. Tabulation of the votes, amounting to nearly 2,000,000, was exceedingly slow, however.

Dr. Miguel Mariano Gomez, 45, former Mayor of Havana, who ran on the coalition Nationalista and Liberal ticket, took the lead in such returns as were announced during last week and quietly conceded himself the presidential victory. Former President Mario G. Menocal, chief opponent of Gomez, made the routine charge of army intimidation at the polls, and latest reports indicate it will be well into this week before the votes are all counted. Observers agreed, however, that Gomez was in.

Meanwhile Col. Fulgencio Batista, who runs the country from his post of army chief of staff, led 500 police and soldiers in a machine gun raid on a nest of kidnapers. They killed three alleged kidnapers, rescued the son of a manufacturer, latest victim of the snotch racket and announced that the snatch racket, which was fast becoming the Cuban national sport, had been dealt a body blow.

Early in the week the government ordered the arrest of former Provisional President Ramon Grau San Martin, who spends his time yapping at Col. Batista from the safety of Miami Beach. The charge was spreading subversive propaganda about Cuba among United States Senators and Representatives.

Far East

War Signs Increase

Talk of what pessimistic observers have for years seen as an inexorably nearing war between Russia and Japan in the Far East was brought sharply into the open last week. For several years the Japanese military, while enthusiastically preparing for hostilities, has banned official comment on war prospects. But Hayao Tada, commander of the Japanese garrison in North China, predicted last Monday that the second Russo-Japanese war will begin with a Russian offensive at the completion of the second Soviet five-year plan.

The second five-year plan began in 1933 but is so far ahead of schedule that it is expected to be completed this year.

The day after Tada's published remarks Moscow casually announced that its standing army numbers 1,300,000 men, far and away the biggest army in the world. Earlier in the week Moscow, on the recommendation of Defense Commissar Klementy Voroshiloff, adopted a $3,000,000 amament budget for this year.

People

Inventors

Flourish in Hyde Park

A quasi-New Deal fund of $30,000 is still begging in Hyde Park, New York, for lack of eligible takers. Offered by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt to start some new industrial venture and thereby employ some of the town's jobless, the money is without an investment despite more than 200 suggestions for spending it.

Three inventors in the town, ready with their gadgets, are pretty impatient with the Hyde Park coordinating committee, in charge of the fund, for not overcoming the crisis with a contribution or two. Tom Rossi has a new kind of fire alarm consisting of a bottle in which are chemicals and three progressively easily melted metal. In the event of a fire, the heating of one of the metals would ring a bell. If you are hard to awaken, the melting of another metal would ring a bigger bell. This process goes on until finally a hammer is released which breaks the bottle and puts out the fire, or something.

A revolutionary toy—a miniature whale that spouts real water all over the living room carpet as it is dragged along by a child, is a second solution to the problem. A third genius thinks the committee can't go wrong on his improved ironing cord. Encased in a coil spring, it puts the reverse english on a jack-in-the-box. It will stretch to an amazing distance, or so its father says, and when released will telescope like a turtle's tail.

Women

Should Study Law

Psychologists of the Human Engineering Laboratory in Hoboken, N. J., emerged last week from a huddle with an annual report and a new conclusion. Women, they announced, are better adapted than men for a career in law, and more of them should try it.

Not intended to be a final scientific dictum on the subject, the brochure, "Women in Law," concluded that lawyers under the microscope showed five common characteristics: a subjective personality, capacity for inductive reasoning, an aptitude for accounting, a large English vocabulary and creative imagination. The female of the species, their score sheet showed, is strong on these characteristics.

Heiress

Clerk to Divorce Her?

Anne Douglass Gould, great-granddaughter of Railroad Builder Jay Gould and scioness of a wealthy New York family that has been in the top layer of the upper stratum of the Diamond Horseshoe bracket for generations, married a young actor from Texas in 1934. The marriage, with a ring borrowed from the license clerk, took place at 3 a. m. in a little New York town after a Christmas night celebration in the big city.

The husband, Frank Spencer Meador, later abandoned his not too promising stage career, took his bride down to Texas and went to work as a bank clerk.

Last March young Anne Gould Meador went back to New York for her father's funeral and returned not again to her bank clerk in San Antonio. Last week Meador admitted he filed suit for divorce. He blamed the contrast of the limited social life in San Antonio with the gay whirl of New York, and all the talk about his being a "Cinderella man." He added:

"Besides, she would have liked to see me give up my bank job and I am intensely interested in banking and investments."

Crime

Ship Trial

Engineer on Stand

In the hours before dawn on September 8, 1934, the Ward Line pleasure ship, Morro Castle, burst into inexplicable flame whereby 134 persons were either cremated or forced into the water to drown off Asbury Park, N. J. In the middle of last November a Federal court in New York put the boat's chief engineer, her acting captain and executive vice president of the operating company on trial under criminal negligence charges.

The attempt to fix responsibility has ground on interminably. Last week Engineer Eben Starr Abbott, who seems to be cast for the role of goat, spent five hours on the stand telling how he left the ship in the first lifeboat. It had been testified earlier that he tore off his chevrons in the lifeboat to hide his rank. He explained that one chevron had come off and that he merely took the other off to keep looking tidy.

He readily poured out testimony damaging to himself but patently shied away from prosecution questions aimed at involving Henry E. Cabaud, the vice president.

Rackets

Artichoke Trial Slated

Developments on New York City's racket front last week:

It was announced that former Artichoke King Joseph Castaldo and five henchmen will go on trial tomorrow in Federal court charged under the Sherman anti-trust laws with a conspiracy in restraint of trade. They were indicted nearly three years ago for maintaining an alleged terrorist monopoly in the distribution of artichokes but had to wait their turn on the criminal calendar, 27 months behind hand in the New York Federal courts. Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia's recent proclamation of a brief "artichoke emergency" was designed to speed the trial.

LaGuardia and California State officials turned their guns on the much more extensive grape racket. Investigators say this racket works like this: Gangsters board each grape-laden lighter as it starts across the Hudson from New Jersey, check the cargo and collect a 10-cent-per-box levy from the wholesalers by threats backed up by occasional violence. A like toll is taken of retailers. The annual take is put at $5,000,000.

The City of New York and the California department of agriculture signed an elaborate agreement to work together, largely through exchange of information, to smell out and suppress the myriad other rackets in perishable produce.

Grayson

Arrested in Hospital

Two and a half years ago John Cooke Grayson was indicted on conspiracy charges growing out of the failure of the Park Savings Bank here. Grayson, chief clerk in the national bank examiner's office, is alleged to have tipped off Vice President Robert S. Stuntz every time the examiners started for his bank. Thus, it is alleged, Stuntz, who later committed suicide, was able to conceal bank shortages.

Last week Grayson's much postponed trial was scheduled in District Supreme Court, but, as usual, instead of the accused the defense attorneys produced doctors' affidavits to the effect that the 64-year-old man was too ill to be tried. He is in a Charlottesville, Va., hospital.

Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue, declining to hear three doctors who had examined Grayson, ordered his $2,000 bond forfeited, issued a bench warrant for his arrest and said:

"It is better that one man should die in the administration of justice than that the public should lose faith in its fair administration in the courts."

Next day Representative Virginia Jenckes (Democrat), of Indiana, suggested O'Donoghue ought to be impeached. O'Donoghue's warrant meanwhile was forwarded to the United States District Court at Roanoke, Va., where Judge John Paul turned it over to a marshal for service, but ordered that Grayson was not to be removed if it endangered his life.

The marshal journeyed to Charlottesville, decided Grayson was much too ill to be moved, arrested him—and left him there. And doctors said that was as near as the man would ever get to any earthly tribunal.

Ashcraft

Guilty in Son's Death

Last week shriveled, paralyzed David Ashcraft, vendor of newspapers, sat in his wheel chair and heard a jury convict him of killing his own son by holding the five-year-old boy over an open gas jet. Little David was killed last autumn in the cheerless basement room where Ashcraft lived on relief.

In that room, it was testified, David Ashcraft had sat helpless in his wheel chair and watched his wife and her friends at drinking parties. With one of these friends, a fellow relief client and a roomer in the same house, it was testified Mrs. Ashcraft carried on a more or less clandestine affair.

Ashcraft admitted killing his son, said he had tried to kill himself with the same gas. His lawyers pleaded insanity as his defense, but the jury after five hours deliberation held him guilty of manslaughter, a verdict that carries a 1 to 15-year prison sentence.

Edith

Denied New Trial

The mountains of southwest Virginia last week got their first pappy killing of 1936 shortly before Judge H. A. W. Skeen overruled the motion of Edith Maxwell, 21-year-old school teacher and first and most famous of the pappy killers, for a new trial.

On Wednesday, Judge Skeen, 76, and decidedly hard of hearing, quickly disposed of the plea that the girl had not had a fair trial because there was no woman on the jury which last November sentenced her to 25 years in the death of her father, Trigg Maxwell. But he appeared impressed with the affidavits of three autopsy experts who expressed doubt that Trigg had died from a blow on the head. Edith said she merely hit her father over the head with a shoe when he started to spank her for staying out late with a boy.

The original autopsy was performed only on the dead man's head and no microscopic examination was made. From studying a report of the autopsy findings District Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald concluded death was not caused by a blow on the head at all. Dr. Thomas C. Gonzales, acting medical examiner of New York City, and Coroner James M. Whitfield, of Richmond, submitted affidavits supporting the MacDonald opinion.

Judge Skeen listened for an hour and a half Thursday to the evidence of Wise County physicians who performed the autopsy and sustained the sentence on the weeping Edith. Her counsel have 60 days to appeal to Virginia's highest court.

In nearby Rocky Mount police were holding youthful Russell Boyd on the charge of shooting his father to death. Boyd said his father was drunk and had beaten his little sister.

Bruno

His Execution Deferred

After four days of wild rumors and frantic rushing of lawyers from court to court, Bruno Richard Hauptmann last Thursday, the only calm figure in the whole hectic picture, was assured of at least eight more weeks of life. Gov. Harold G. Hoffman gave him a reprieve to the convicted murderer of the Lindbergh baby just 29 hours before he was scheduled to be executed.

A gadget with light bulbs had been applied to the lethal chair to test it. The lights flashed: the chair was in perfect working order. The wire services that gather the Nation's news had notified the Nation's editors when they would receive the first past-tense story (to be written before the execution), when to expect the first 1,000 words of noncanned description of the event, etc.

On Sunday, Nugent Dodds and Neil Burkinshaw, Washington constitutional lawyers, joined the defense forces after New Jersey's board of last resort for clemency had denied Hauptmann's plea the day before. Monday was given over to legal conferences in Trenton and a search for a favorable U. S. judge. Tuesday Judge J. Warren Davis, of the Federal Circuit Court in Trenton, denied the condemned man a writ of habeas corpus. Wednesday there was more mapping of legal maneuvers, and Gov. Hoffman said his private investigation of the case was continuing.

Late Wednesday there was a secret conference in New York between J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, Co. H. Norman Schwarzhopf, head of the New Jersey State Police, and New York City Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine. Rumors flew thick and fast that there had been a "confession" by some one other than Hauptmann. But it later developed the New York conference was about race track gambling.

On Thursday Attorney Burkinshaw rushed into the United States Supreme Court and seized the first pause in proceedings there to interject a 12-page brief asking for a writ of habeas corpus. After lunch Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes denied the plea in a single blunt sentence. That was the second time the highest court in the land had turned thumbs down on Hauptmann. All the pleas have been based on charges that the long trial in Flemington last winter was unfair.

An hour later came the news that Hoffman had granted the reprieve in the face of open threats that to do so would precipitate a move to impeach him in the New Jersey legislature, which convened last week.

Letters

They Threatened President

Into a luxurious Park avenue apartment in New York City last week walked two Secret Service agents to arrest nervous, well-dressed Austin Phelps Palmer, retired mechanical engineer. Three days later a Federal grand jury indicted Palmer on a charge of writing two threatening letters to President Roosevelt.

Free on $2,000 bail, Palmer will, if convicted, face a maximum term of 5 years' imprisonment or a $1,000 fine, or both, on each of the two counts contained in the indictment.

First of the two letters, written November 28 on stationery of the Park avenue apartment from which the address had been almost obliterated, charged the President with having "no respect for law, people's property, private business or anything else. I warn you," it continued, "you are going to pay for it if you damage my investments." The second letter threatened to strangle the Chief Executive.

A defective letter "o" on the typewriter on which the letters are alleged to have been written, led to Palmer's arrest.

Disasters

Plane Crash

17 Die in Swampland

The hamlet of Goodwin, Ark., had gone home for the night. It was 7 o'clock and J. W. French had closed his general store and gone to supper. A few minutes later George Jones, a worried farmer, banged on the door and told of hearing airplane motors droning over his swampland cabin, followed by a ripping, rending crash.

The hamlet of Goodwin came to life, got out its hip boots and lanterns, hitched its wagons for a gory, mortuary task and plunged into the pitch-dark swamplands. It was 9 o'clock last Tuesday night when the successful searching party started and it wallowed through the mire for two hours before picking up the trail—a trail first of bits of canvas, then pieces of metal, parts of mangled bodies, and finally the motors and fuselage of a huge luxury airliner half buried in the ooze.

By 9:45 the next morning a mule drawn wagon brought out the last of the 17 bodies and headlines were blazing with news of the worst tragedy in the history of American commercial aviation. State rangers mounted guard over the wreckage to prevent looting and the United States Government rushed a delegation of six, headed by Eugene L. Vidal, Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Aeronautics, to investigate the cause of the crash.

They found that the liner, an American Airlines transcontinental transport bound from Memphis, Tenn., to Little Rock, Ark., had cut a swath through the tree tops for nearly 400 yards, scattering bodies, wreckage and gasoline the whole way, before it crashed into the mud, killing its 14 passengers and crew of three.

After two days 15 of the dead had been identified and officials were predicting the cause of the accident would never be known. The landing lights switch was off, the ignition was on and the speed indicator was jammed at 180 miles per hour, about cruising speed, when the wreckage was examined. This might indicate the crash came without warning. But it was pointed out that the impact might have thrown the switches and affected the reading "all well" at 7:15, which must have of the speed indicator.

Pilot Jerry Marshall had radioed been only a few minutes before the crash, giving his altitude as 2,000 feet.

Storm

34 Die in Shipwreck

Treacherous Peacock Spit, a mariner's nightmare in brown ribbed sea sand just north of the mouth of the Columbia River on the Oregon Coast, is called the graveyard of ships. It is haunted by the ghosts of more than 90 lost vessels. Last week its ghostly population was swelled by one more ship and 34 seamen.

Early last Sunday morning the 3,564-ton intercoastal freighter Iowa, outbound from Portland, pulled out of the river into the Pacific in the teeth of a raging southeaster. The United States Coast Guard got a single frantic radio distress signal just before dawn, and all was quiet. With the rising sun the coastguardsmen sighted the wreck, twisted in two by frothing white seas, distress signals flying. She was about a mile off shore and the Cape Disappointment lighthouse telescope revealed corpses aboard and around her.

Capt. R. Stanley Patch, of the Coast Guard cutter Onendaga, made a dash for the stricken vessel, but was beaten back by mountainous waves. He said:

"Capt. Yates and his crew never had a chance. The seas were as rough as I have ever experienced. We had to use all our power to keep from going on the spit ourselves."

The ill-fated boat was owned by the States Steamship Co., captained by Capt. Edgar L. Yates, 68. By midweek only six bodies had been washed ashore and the continuing storm still kept the Coast Guard away from the crumpled hulk.

Ethiopian War Brings Building Boom in Wake

Town in Italian Somaliland Grows to Metropolis Over Night.

By the Associated Press.

Mogadiscio, Italian Somaliland, Jan. 18.—Boom time prosperity is sweeping across Mogadiscio in the wake of the Italo-Ethiopian war.

Almost over night this once small trading town on the East African coast is expanding into an Oriental metropolis that might astonish the most imaginative of American real estate developers.

A year ago Mogadiscio, a call port for trading vessels in the Indian Ocean, was a town of 28,800. The 28,000 were natives, the 800 Europeans. Today there is no accurate counting of the population, but conservative estimates place the figure at more than 100,000.

Scores of new buildings and barracks, all dazzling white stucco, have been springing up daily for the last eight months. It is impossible to reserve a hotel room, as every one has been taken for weeks by army officers, traders and others attracted here by the war.

By Robert C. Albright

PERHAPS it was Senator Bob Reynolds who took the first bold stand against political fences. It was 'way back last session. Reynolds had framed one of the most ingenious amendments we ever saw, and he explained it something like this:

"Some of you folks over there are standing on one side of the fence, and some of us over here are standing on the other. Now this amendment of mine will take care of that. It will do it by removing the fence. Then nobody will know where we stand."

A great many fences have fallen in Congress since that day, but new ones have sprung up, and it isn't very difficult when a ballot comes around to tell where pretty nearly everybody stands.

The "baby" bond bonus bill was a good fence-mover, but it didn't move the fence very far, and when it came down to it, no matter how you sliced it or voted, it was still the bonus, stacked in a neat little pile on the veterans' side of the fence.

There are limits to this fence-moving business and there are limits to this theory of beating your opposition by meeting it. But it took the Townsend old-age pension plan, and the combined inflation forces of House and Senate, to fully bring home that surface fact to the Administration. If you doubt it, give an ear to the clatter of hammer and nails, and an eye to the stockades arising.

For no matter how far left the New Deal moved, there were greener fields farther on for extremer leftists, who somehow never could tolerate fences unless they were considerably to the west of them. It took the extremists sometime to reform their lines and scout out the new territory, but now they report they are ready for action and are quite willing to tear down the new fences and let the New Deal in.

NO. 1 ITEM in super-social-betterment program is a $5,000,000,000 a year national workers insurance program, not entirely unworthy of the late Huey P. Long, which they offer as a substitute for the Roosevelt social security law.

Only the $200-a-month Townsend old-age pension plan can vie with this Frazier-Lundeen national workers bill in its freedom with public and private purse.

Funds for the proposed social legislation millenium would be secured by "suitable revenue legislation from high incomes, corporate surpluses and other accumulated taxes, or indirectly, by pay-roll taxes, or indirectly, by sales taxes, upon the workers of the United States, whose standard of living Congress hereby seeks to protect."

Out of the fund, "any worker who is totally unemployed or partially unemployed shall be entitled to compensation," the bill declares, stipulating further that a worker totally unemployed shall receive compensation equal to the average weekly wage payable in his occupation or profession in his district, up to the maximum limit contained in the legislation.

Any worker who refuses employment "without good cause" would be denied Federal employment insurance benefits, but if he stays off the job to keep from joining a company union, or where a strike, lock-out or labor dispute is in progress, or where wages are not equal to the union scale in his district, he may receive compensation.

Under the "self-employment" insurance section of the bill any worker who is unable to make $10 per week, working for himself, in agriculture, the fisheries, forestry, trade, manufacturing, professional or other services, would be permitted a helping from the Federal Treasury.

Retirement of all at 60 with pension is permitted, and if the worker labored up until the time he was 60, or even thereafter, his pension would amount to the average weekly wage in his occupation.

That's about all, except for maternity and other aids, and provision for nomination of appointees to the administering agency by the workers themselves.

Ordinarily, of course, we wouldn't flick a lash at ten ciphers, but the very mention of $5,000,000,000 right now can be counted on to give the Administration the jitters at a time when they need and can't find $2,000,000,000 for the bonus, another $2,000,000,000 for relief, $1,000,000, to redeem the AAA and a ew million-odd to make a new one. So don't die of shock if they start building fences around the Treasury in the next week or two.

FLOWER of the old school of Southern gentry is Senator Ellison DuRant Smith, of South Carolina. One glimpse of his flowing mustache, intractable eyebrows, jocund cheeks, and your mind's eye builds an appropriate setting—white-columned porticos, bustling servants and mint-stained glasses, melodiously a-tinkle with ice.

There are just two ways to rob that humor-lined countenance of its accustomed genial beneficence, as some have learned to their sorrow. One jest at the expense of his native cotton, one slighting reference to the "conquered territory," and the trick is turned, usually to the dismay of the jester.

Former Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart remembered the first rule, when he appeared before Smith's Agriculture Committee last week. Meticulously he went out of his way to pay tribute to cotton—confessed he buys shirts made only of that material. Senator Smith beamed.

But for all of his knowledge of Senate ways, Brookhart slipped on his second cue. He derided the "grass roots" Republicans for paying homage at the tomb of Abe Lincoln. As confessed worshipers at the shrine of States' rights, said Brookhart, they should have made a pilgrimage to the grave of Jeff Davis.

Too late, the former Iowa Senator discovered his error. In no time at all, Senator Smith had whipped out a copy of the Republican platform of 1860, on which Lincoln had stood for the Presidency. It made the strongest of States' rights commitments, and denounced in unequivocal terms Federal armed invasion of any of the States.

Forecasts of Supreme Court action, no matter how well founded in precedents, or how seemingly enlightening the clews thrown out by the justices themselves, are regarded as extremely hazardous by newspapermen who have guessed, and missed, and now know better.

If there was one law that Washington journalists thought the court would invalidate the first pop out of the bag, it was the Bankhead act. It was while arguing this case that Solicitor General Stanley Reed fainted, after striving to answer critical questions justices showered upon him.

When the court in its AAA ruling said the Bankhead act went even further in controlling farm production, reporters smiled knowingly. A week later the Bankhead law came up for decision. The court dismissed it for lack of jurisdiction. Moral: Don't count your laws before they are invalidated.

Ellsworth

Rescued With a Cold

Last November 23, Explorer Lincoln Ellsworth and his pilot, Herbert Hollick-Kenyon, headed their good airship Polar Star out into space over the icy and uncharted wastes of the Antarctic. They left their famous supply boat, the Wyatt Earp, at Dundee Island and kept in touch with it by radio for 1,000 miles, until they were about half way to the Bay of Whales, their destination over on the other side of the South Pole.

After that their radio signals stopped and nobody knew what had happened to them.

Last week the British royal research ship Discovery II, after a long rescue voyage, nosed its way into the Bay of Whales, and there were Ellsworth and Hollick-Kenyon snugly encamped on the ice barrier in the Littlle American region that was the scene of Admiral Richard E. Byrd's Antarctic adventures. They had run out of fuel, their radio transmitter had gone bad, and Ellsworth had caught a slight cold.

Other air news of the week:

Howard Hughes, just turned 30, who achieved fame 10 years ago in the movies as producer of "Hell's Angels" and a string of other hits, dropped down all unexpected at Newark Airport one day last week after cutting 35 minutes off the coast-to-coast record set by Col. Roscoe Turner. Hughes, who set a world speed record of 352 miles an hour for land planes last September, made the trip in 9 hours and 27 minutes.

Col. Edgar S. Gorrell, chief of staff of the U. S. Air Service during the World War and former president of the Stutz Motor Car Co., was named coordinator of America's commercial air lines. He was elected president of the newly organized Air Transport Association that includes all the country's lines.

Death

Notables Pass On

Several nationally known figures were among persons who died last week.

John F. Hylan, 67, former Mayor of New York, headed the list. He died of heart disease after a brief illness.

He arrived in New York from an up-State farm as a young man with $1.50 in his pocket, got a job on the Brooklyn elevated railroad at $1.60 a day, studied law at night and entered politics.

He was known as "Red Mike" from the color of his mustache, but preferred to be called "Honest John." His long fight to retain a 5-cent street car fare and his friendship with Publisher William Randolph Hearst figured in his political success.

Heart disease likewise caused the death of Samuel Lionel Rothafel, 53, in New York. Roxy was a leading radio motion-picture enterpreneu..

His team, "Roxy and His Gang," was widely known in the early days of radio. He was the first man to convert a movie house into a cathedral-like building and he made it pay. In recent years, however, "Roxy" seemed to lose his magic touch. A Philadelphia theater which he backed closed its doors after a few weeks.

Maj. Gen. Herbert B. Crosby, 64, former District Commissioner and one-time Army chief of Cavalry, died in Walter Reed Hospital after a long illness from inflammatory rheumatism.

He was the Commissioner in the time of the 1932 bonus army riots. His distinguished Army record included service in France, the Philippines and Cuba.

Theodore A. Metz, 86-year-old violinist and composer, who died in a New York hospital, was best known for his work, "A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight."

His song, little known for the first ten years after it was written, became a hit during the Spanish-American War and spurred on Roosevelt's "Rough Riders" at San Juan Hill.

Hamilton Fish, a former United States Representative and one-time sub-Treasurer of the United States in New York, died in his eighty-seventh year at Aiken, S. C. His home was in Garrison, N. Y. He was the father of Representative Hamilton Fish (Republican), New York, mentioned as a Republican Presidential possibility.

Cabbages Are Guarded

The week's haul of news from the far-flung fronts of science:

Cornell University is very proud of odorless cabbages developed by its Prof. C. H. Myers and revealed last week that it is closely guarding 1,000 smell-less heads to keep them from getting contaminated with pollen from ordinary plebian cabbage. Prediction is that in two years there will be enough seed to put the aristocratic breed on the market.

Also at Cornell it was announced that a new cycloton—a magnetic contraption developing 2,500,000 volt rays—is making artificial radium out of table salt and changing gold into mercury, but not vice versa.

The Journal of the American Medical Association announced discovery by four Copenhagen scientists of a compound of insulin that has twice as long a period of effectiveness in the treatment of diabetes as has insulin itself. The new treatment apparently would cut the number of periodic hypodermic injections necessary to keep a diabetic patient alive.

Chicago University's Dr. Arthur Holly Compton announced he was organizing a world-wide hunt for variations of the mysterious cosmic rays, which, among other things, will penetrate 292 feet of solid lead. The idea is to set up a network of cosmic-ray meters as observation stations to record the varying strength of the rays in different areas.

Canal Revenue Drop Is Blamed On Trade War

Panama Counts Few Ships; $21,367,713 Tolls Collected in 1935.

By the Associated Press.

Balboa, Canal Zone, Jan. 18.—Statisticians this week blamed nationalistic policies of the trading world and labor troubles on the West Coast of North America for a sharp decrease in Panama Canal transits and toll during 1935.

Figures up to and including December 15 showed a decrease of 6 per cent in transits and 8.7 per cent in tolls compared to the corresponding period in 1934.

In 1935 tolls of $21,367,713 were paid by 4,814 vessels, while the previous year 5,119 vessels paid $23,393,402 in tolls. Canal statisticians, however, pointed out that the 1935 figures showed an increase of 10.8 in transits and 5.7 in tolls over 1933.

"This 'Buy American', 'Buy British,' 'Buy Homeland Products' campaign has resulted in the laying up of a lot of European and American shipping," they explained.

"Countries have been trying to live within themselves. Consequently international trade has dropped decidedly with a corresponding loss to shipping.

"Nitrates and petroleum shipments, particularly the former, continue to keep well ahead and to hold up the daily transit average here."

West Virginia's Silicosis Tragedy Recalls Long War on Dread Malady

What is the truth about the amazing tragedy that wrote "Death" in capital letters across the town of Gauley Bridge, W. Va.? Did the workers in Hawk's Nest Tunnel breathe a rock dust that caused them to die like flies? Representative Marcantonio of New York insists that 476 of them were victims of the dread silicosis, and that 1,500 more are doomed to die. His charges are now being studied by a Congressional subcommittee. Meanwhile the head of the firm of contractors which hired them to drill the tunnel through a mountain has publicly branded the 450 suits filed by workmen as "holdup and blackmail."

Masks, Safety Methods of Drilling Help Reduce Fatalities.

Gauley Bridge Death List May Be as High as 400.

By Jean Stansbury.

In Gauley Bridge, W. Va., most of the male population are resigned to death. During the progress of a three-mile tunnel necessary in the construction of the Union Carbide & Carbon Co. hydroelectric plant, started in 1933, a deposit of pure silica was encountered. Silica is valuable, so the deposit was mined by the workers engaged on the project. Now the workers claim that during the process of mining the silica, most of them contracted the deadly silicosis, dreaded by miners all over the world.

Early reports held that the doctors attending the men were baffled at the prevalence of tuberculosis and pneumonia among the men. The charge has also been made that during the first winter of construction 70 men died. The obvious conclusion would be that so high a death rate from tuberculosis and pneumonia would merit investigation. But no autopsies were made until the following winter, when it was discovered through the autopsies that out of ten men who had died from lung trouble nine had been victims of silicosis.

Reports say that the death rate from lung diseases in Fayette County, where the project lay, doubled in 1933-34. An ominous finger of warning. The following year the death rate from the same type of disease was the highest in the history of the county.

Officials of the Rhinehart & Dennis Co., of Charlottesville, Va., claim that there was an epidemic of pneumonia throughout Fayette County during the first year of construction.

House Labor Committee Launches Investigation.

Representative Marcantonio, of the United States House of Representatives, has charged that the dead men died needlessly. He has asked for an investigation of the working conditions in the tunnel by the House Labor Committee, which has been started.

Some time ago suits for damages against the construction company were filed in Charleston, W. Va., amounting to approximately $1,500,000, brought by workmen who claimed they contracted silicosis while working on the tunnel. Most of the suits have since been dropped, settled out of court by the company.

A puzzling feature of the situation in Gauley Bridge is the time that has elapsed since the tunneling and, presumably, the contraction of the disease by the men, and the present disturbance.

Silicosis is not a new disease or an obscure disease. It is known all over the world in practically every hard rock mining district. All doctors know the oath of Hippocrates, many laymen have heard of it, but few apparently know that Hippocrates also spoke of the metal digger as a man who breathed with difficulty. From 400 B. C. to 1936 A. D., the knowledge has been alive. Yet men died like flies in West Virginia from breathing silica dust.

From that holocaust, which has been widely publicized, and from the suits under common law pending in the courts throughout the United States charging death and disability from silicosis, industry should take immediate warning.

The deaths from actual silicosis should be poignant enough as a lesson, the racketeering which is now in progress bids fair to become as terrible a menace as bootlegging ever was in this country.

Bureau of Mines Is Fighting Source.

The United States Bureau of Mines has worked tirelessly for years to combat the disease at its source; i. e., through safety methods of drilling, through proper ventilation of tunnels and mines, through effective masks for the miners. But their efforts must have the co-operation of State and Federal laws, the operators and the miners themselves before control of silicosis can become effective.

In South Africa, for example, every man employed in the districts where silica or silica dust is in evidence, must undergo a physical examination before entering the mines. During his employment, if the original examination showed him to be free of lung weakness, he is examined every six months for traces of silicosis or any signs of pulmonary affection. At the first signs, he is removed from the danger immediately.

All mine dust is hazardous to the health. Some, from certain types of metal ores, through poisonous attributes. Others from irritation to the lungs resulting in a disease commonly called "pneumoniocosis." Silicosis takes its name from silica, the most dangerous of the rock dusts; anthracosis from coal dust, and siderosis from iron dust. Those different diseases, their causes and effects are important to remember, for in the courts the fate of industrial companies and insurance companies may be decided on the strength of the type of disease allegedly contracted by the claimants.

Cannot Ignore Disease Or Chance Contraction.

The diseases cannot be ignored or chanced by the operators. As early as 1713 a patent was granted in Great Britain for grinding flint by wet methods. The former method, that of pounding the flints dry, was discarded since it—

"Proved very destructive to mankind, so much that any person ever so healthful and strong, working in that business cannot possibly survive over two years, occasioned by the dust sucked into the body by the air he breathes."

More than 400 men are supposed to have died in Gauley Bridge, presumably of silicosis. The early diagnosis of these cases were tuberculosis and pneumonia. Yet in 1862 a report based on an examination of 600 miners was given by a Dr. Peacock. In it he stated:

"The quickness of pulse, the rapid and extreme emaciation, and the night perspiration so characteristic of true phthisis are generally absent or only slighly marked."

The war against silicosis is waged without ceasing all over the world where there are hard rock mines. In Western Australia in 1910, Dr. J. H. L. Cumpston reported that the death rate due to tuberculosis among male non-miners over 15 years of age was 6, among miners it was 192 per 100,000. But, the death rate due to respiratory diseases among all male non-miners was 167 per 100,000 as against the rate among miners of 539 per 100,000. That rate has been lowered in the mining district due to rigorous safety measures in drilling, ventilation and health precautions among the miners.

In 1917 Dr. Lanza, making a survey in the Joplin, Mo., district had the disease. Both 720 examined had silicosis; 432 out 1,018 examined in the Butte, Mont., district had the disease. Both districts have since lowered the rate through adopting methods of mining and ventilation that keep down the dust while drilling and carry away the dust that finds its way into the air through blasting and tunneling. However the death rate in all the communities is still unsatisfactorily high, particularly among the granite workers in Vermont.

There are many theories as to the cause of the deadly quality of silica. Some lean to the idea that the knife like form of the particles effects the trouble by scarring the lung tissues. Others believe that the known solubility of silica combined with a toxic quality is sufficiently poisonous to bring on the disease. Still another idea is that the silica dust has a preservative effect on the tissue cells which take it up as it is breathed into the lungs, thus clogging the pulmonary passages. In other words, every one has seen a bag of damp sand. Imagine that in place of one's lungs and the resultant effect on breathing.

The uncertainty and lack of definite knowledge of the disease and means to arrest it lend it a terrible power in the hands of unscrupulous lawyers, labor agitators and other folk interested in stirring up trouble. Until recently silicosis was not included under the workmen's compensation laws of the several States. Many are now writing in provisions for such compensation but experts and men who have devoted years to the study of silicosis feel that the remedy lies in correcting the first cause rather than recompensing the effect.

The director of the Bureau of Mines, Dr. Finch, conservatively estimates that there are upward of $50,000,000 worth of suits pending in the courts of the United States against silica companies, mining companies, cement companies and many others on the grounds of alleged silicosis contracted while the claimants were in the employ of the company. Even a Rochester transportation company found itself being sued for damages after a generous jury had done the spade work for an ambitious lawyer.

Estimates of the approximate amount of money in the whimsical hands of juries around the country run from Dr. Finch's estimate of $50,000,000 to $100,000,000. Without o doubt many of these cases are justified but——

The State of Missouri has become hag ridden with racketeers aided by juries who award damages with an enthusiastic lavishness at the mere mention of the word "silicosis." The fact that many of the juries are composed of working men and the defendants corporations helps explain some of the judgments reached. These verdicts often disregard entirely the disinterested and technical testimony of doctors, engineers and clinicians.

Racket Gains Strength With Great Rapidity.

Reports issued by the Bureau of Mines afford an eye-opening vista of the possibilities of the racket which is gaining strength and width with a terrifying rapidity.

One, a letter from a mill owner, who suddenly found himself with seven suits based on silicosis on his hands. Ambulance chasing lawyers have found a new and much more profitable form of exercise. The mill owner claimed his mill had been dustless for years. In the first case tried there was a hung jury; the ailment of the plaintiff was syphilitic arthritis, no silicosis.

A chemist running hand in hand with one of the scavenger lawyers is alleged to have said: "To hell with the chemical analysis; all we need is dust."

A verdict of $10,000 was returned by a jury March 7 in a Missouri circuit court in favor of an employe of a sand company. The award was for personal injuries he was alleged to have suffered from contraction of silicosis while in the company's employ. The plaintiff was employed by the company 12 years ago.

In Rochester, October 1932, a case went to a jury which awarded nearly $14,000 to the widow by whom the case was brought.

"In this case it was clearly shown in the evidence that the deceased died from the rupture of an aortic aneurysm into the esophagus, that this aneurysm was due to syphilis."

Must Pay Heavily For Its Carelessness.

Thus the vicious practices go on. In the case of the West Virginia miners who sued for damages in the West Virginia courts, the State Supreme Court threw out cases involving approximately 200 men on the statutory grounds. With the South African method of physical examinations such delay would have been impossible. Industry is undoubtedly going to pay a high penalty for carelessness. Many of the truly deserving cases probably will go without recompense; many awards will be made to undeserving claimants, but the fault primarily lies in the neglect of precautionary methods by the operators themselves.

In 1917 records of the Bureau of Mines investigations in the Butte, Mont., mines showed that "few of the mines had adequate ventilating fans on the surface, and these fans were not reversible. Dry drilling was general and no spraying was done: (recall the British patent of 1713?) miners' phthisis was prevalent and the death rate from pulmonary troubles was high."

To summarize:

Silicosis, or miners' phthisis, has been known to occur among miners in certain districts for centuries.

Symptoms of silicosis have been carefully set out by physicians from 400 B. C. through the Middle Ages, down to 1936.

And, to quote again from a report made in 1925 by R. R. Sayers, men with silicosis can improve in suitable surroundings to recovery in the first stage, can improve materially, in the second stage, and somewhat in the third stage.

The quiet corn field shown in the upper left photograph is at Gauley Bridge, W. Va. It contains the unmarked graves of 169 tunnel workers who died of silicosis, said to have been contracted while they were drilling a tunnel through a mountain near Charleston for a water power project. Just above is a view of two miners drilling blast holes in a quartz vein similar to that which caused the silicosis deaths but in another region. On the left, members of a sub-committee of the Labor Committee of the House of Representatives begin hearings on the deaths of the West Virginia workers.

3-Day Convention Will Take Stock of America's Parks

Experts May Urge a Still Bigger Federal Plan of Expansion.

By Fanning Hearon.

Park, conservation and recreation authorities from all parts of the Nation are gathering in Washington this week and preparatory to discussing what the New Deal, which has plowed under corn and subsidized fan dancing, has done and is doing in the development of woodland retreats and bucolic park preserves.

Though it has not yet come of age—its twenty-first anniversary falls on August 25, 1937—the National Park Service will take stock at the three-day conference, opening Wednesday, not only of ambitious expansion in the Federal system but also of the enormous strides it has made since 1933 in the establishment and improvement of State and local parks through assistance of the Civilian Conservation Corps, Resettlement Administration, Works Progress Administration and other emergency agencies.

The first duty of the Park Service was to administer and preserve the parks and monuments which were under Interior Department supervision when the bureau was founded. In 1933 it took over a number of additional holdings which had been administered by the War Department and the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture.

Now, through its branch of planning and State co-operation, the National Park Service is turning to the business of aiding the States and their subdivisions in the survey, acquisition and development of parks, parkways and recreation areas. Headed by Conrad L. Wirth, assistant director of the service, the planning-co-operation branch has set up eight regional offices in Springfield, Mass.; Bronxville, N. Y.; Richmond, Atlanta, Indianapolis, Omaha, Oklahoma City and San Fransisco.

At the time of President Roosevelt's inauguration there were about 3,000,000 acres of State parks being used annually by 55,000,000 people. In less than three years this acreage has been increased to 3,500,000. The State of Connecticut is not that large. Virginia, West Virginia, South Carolina, Mississippi, New Mexico, Nevada and Montana have acquired their first park properties. More than a score of States have acquired new parks or additions to existing ones.

Experts attribute these acquisitions to the awakening of States and communities to the fact that the Federal Government was anxious to extend aid in every manner possible. States with programs under way were given impetus, those with no park or recreation plans gladly welcomed a start and joined the parade.

At the beginning of this year there were 407 CCC companies on State, county and metropolitan parks and recreational demonstration projects in 47 States, all except Delaware. In line with orders from President Roosevelt and Robert Fechner, director of Emergency Conservation Work, to reduce the enrollment of the corps with an eye on permanency, the number of park CCC camps is to be gradually reduced to 366.

Under the Federal Government's co-operative program, the State park has its timber protected from fire, disease and vandalism and its topography from floods and soil erosion. It is endowed with trails and rustic bridges and simple shelters, cabins for overnights or vacations, recreation lodges, outdoor fireplaces, parking spaces, swimming holes, boating and controlled fishing, water and waste disposal systems.

As well planned park may be used by thousands and still keep its scenic beauty unharmed by the process of directing use on the so-called service areas and leaving the majority of the tract untouched except for obscure trails and an occasional shelter or lookout tower.

"In the recreational demonstration projects," explains Mr. Wirth, "we have newcomers to the recreation field. They are not National parks, State parks, county parks, metropolitan parks or forests of any technical description. They are part of the recreation renaissance, directed at the proper use of resources and the personal health and happiness of the people."

The National Park Service is developing 46 of these areas in 24 States in co-operation with Mr. Fechner's office, the Resettlement Administration and the various States' park and conservation authorities. Ranging from a 21-acre highway wayside in Virginia to a 67,333-acre tract in North Dakota, they are located on land not being put to its highest social use—"land unprofitable to farm due to lack of fertility, erosion and misuse; land which, because of its location, even if suitable for agriculture, attains greater social and economic importance when dedicated to the welfare of city populations through recreation."

The 433,352 acres were purchased with Federal funds for $4,807,872, an average of a few cents more than $11 an acre. The 46 areas are so located that they are within half day, round trip distance of 30,000,000 people. Their development is especially concerned with outdoor recreation for all classes of population in the manufacturing centers. This is to be accomplished through organized group camping.

"In accordance with the sizes of the areas," says Mr. Wirth, "most of them contain from a few to several thousand acres. Organized camps are erected. Each will serve a maximum of 150 persons divided into units, each unit caring for not more than 30. Units will consist of housing facilities ranging from tents to substantial cabins, according to the climate; separate quarters for counselors, a central lodge or recreation building, central kitchen and dining room and a fireplace for social gatherings.

"The units will operate individually under the supervision of trained counselors and most meals are served from the central dining room. Though of wide construction range, the overnight shelter is usually a frame building with a large screened opening around it just under the roof. Four to six persons occupy each shelter. Camps are set apart for such groups as social and welfare organizations, mothers and youngsters, boys, girls, women and men. Each has a definite purpose to serve and will do so under the general supervision of counselors and recreation directors.

"Operation of these camps is spoken of in the future because none is ready for organized business. Present plans are for the formal opening of at least one camp on each area by July 1, 1936."

Washingtonians will be interested in at least six of these areas and several "waysides" because they are in nearby Maryland and Virginia. Maryland has a 10,333-acre project called Catoctin, located on Highway No. 15 near Thurmont. Virginia boasts Chopowamsic, 15,000 acres, near Dumfries on the Washington-Richmond Highway; Bull Run, 2,037 acres, near Manassas; Shenandoah, 9,547 acres, and Appalachian National Parkway, 9,800 acres, both in the Shenandoah National Park project region; Swift Creek, 7,482 acres, between Richmond and Petersburg, and several highway "waysides" totaling 384 acres.

State parks which have been visited by thousands of Capital residents and which are being rapidly developed are: Fort Frederick State Park, near Hagerstown, Md., where the only stone forest has been restored with CCC labor; Patapsco Forest Park, north of the Washington-Baltimore highway where it crosses the Patapsco River; Seashore State Park, near Virginia Beach; Westmoreland State Park, on the Potomac between the birthplaces of Washington and Lee; Douthat Park, in the shadow of the Warm Springs Mountains near Clifton Forge, Va., and Cacapon State Park, near Berkeley Springs, W. Va.

When FERA was closed out last December, the National Park Service entered another field of recreational development when the Works Progress Administration approved its request for $736,916 to operate 45 transient camps which, under the new setup, came to be known as WPA work camps. They will be located in 15 States—California, Colorado, Indiana, Kentucky, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, North Dakota, Nebraska, New York, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Utah, West Virginia and Iowa. On January 9 the service had taken over 34 camps and expected to have the others under way as soon as arrangements could be made.

Project scope of these camps will be broader than that observed by the CCC administration. The force will be permitted to work within corporate limits of towns and cities, something the CCC recruits were not allowed to do.

And is this Federal co-operation in the development of State playgrounds to end when the "emergency" ends? The answer is "no," if proposed legislation now pending in Congress is passed. It would authorize the Federal Government to extend aid to the States and their subdivisions in the survey, acquisition and development of parks, parkways and recreation areas just as it has in the construction of Federal aid highways and in the protection of forests. This would be done through the National Park Service.

Indorsements of the proposed legislation have been put in formal resolutions by the National Recreation Association, National Conference on State Parks, American Institute of Park Executives and the American Planning and Civic Association.

The quarterly magazine, Planning and Civic Comment, interprets the bill in this manner:

"If the provisions of the bill should go into effect, the first move would be a comprehensive study of the public park, parkway and recreation programs of the United States as a whole and of the States and their political units to determine what lands have or may have their highest social value when used for such purposes. This study would be made by the National Park Service upon authorization from the Secretary of the Interior in co-operation with the park, recreation and conservation authorities of the States.

(Note: The bill has since been changed to read, "Other than on lands under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture.")

"As the proposed land study advances, it will become obvious that certain areas should be publicly owned, or, if already publicly owned, developed into recreation spots. Then the park service would be available to the States as advisor and co-ordinator in carrying out such phases of the program. The bill provides for the co-operation of the National Park Service with regional, interstate, State and intrastate agencies in these matters.

"It will further become obvious as the proposed project moves along that, in order to devote certain public lands to parks and recreation, transfers of ownership or supervisory authority will be necessary. In this respect the bill gives the Secretary of the Interior, subject to approval of the President of the United States, and the head of the department having jurisdiction over the land involved, authority to transfer to any State and its subdivisions any land heretofore or hereafter acquired by the United States, if in the judgment of the Secretary, such land is chiefly valuable for parks, parkways, or recreation areas.

"At this point in the bill the Secretary of the Interior is also invested with the authority to accept, on behalf of the United States, such lands as may be donated or proposed for donation as park and recreation areas. As is usual in such instances, the United States reserves all minerial rights on such tracts. Private funds donated to further the program may also be accepted.

"It is strongly expressed in the bill that the Secretady of the Interior can transfer no lands without the approval of the head of the department having jurisdiction at the time of the transfer.

"These proposed land transfers must be submitted to Congress while in session. After they have been before this body for 60 calendar days without objection, they are automatically approved. Congress may decree that this 60-day limit be shortened, and if it does, an unopposed transfer becomes effective accordingly. Should Congress adjourn before the expiration of these 60 days, the transfer can not go into effect until 60 calendar days after the opening of the next session.

"If the Secretary of the Interior finds that for five consecutive years any lands transferred to the States by the Federal Government for parks and recreation have not been used for these purposes, these lands will automatically revert to the United States, subject to review by local Federal courts.

"The trend toward regional planning for the proper use of land and resources has left its mark on the bill in the provisions authorizing the States to co-operate with each other in the planning, establishing and developing of any park, parkway, or recreation area. Condition is stated that a representative of the National Park Service and every Government agency having jurisdiction over land involved, all appointed by the President, shall sit in on all conferences and witness all negotiations so that they may report proceedings and agreements to Congress.

"The amount of money to put this proposed Federal-aid recreation project into operation and keep it going is to be decided and appropriated by Congress on the basis of estimates from the National Park Serice."

Britain May Hide Oil Supply Underground in Case of War

By the Associated Press.

London, Jan. 18.—Creation of enormous underground oil-storage reservoirs in open country without aerial landmarks as a safeguard for British oil supplies in case of war is advocated by Col. Whiston A. Bristow, expert on oil and low-temperature carbonization.

Such a scheme, Col. Bristow declared, in an address on "Oil Supplies in War," might cost fully £100,000,000, but added it might well be the "means of saving the country."

"In the event of England being involved in another war," he said, "we would require a great deal of oil, because our navy and air force are wholly dependent on oil, while it is vital also to the army.

"As it is almost impossible to provide complete protection against aerial attack, I think the best procedure, so far as oil depots are concerned, would be to lay down extensive underground storage depots. These must be in open country, and grass and trees must grow above them in the usual manner.

Despite defensive measures now in effect, Col. Bristow declared, the majority of the existing British oil depots could be completely destroyed by the air force of a hostile power within a week after war started. Britain's main oil storage depots, he said, are nearly all less than an hour's flight from the Belgian coast.

Controversy Keen On Birth Control

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 18.—Advocates of birth control will have another inning in the four-cornered controversy over its efficacy and morality when the American Birth Control League holds its fifteenth annual meeting here January 22 and 23.

Hard on the heels of a series of public arguments on the question of using birth control methods, or permitting their use, in which two branches of the clergy, a group of scientists and the league participated, recapitulation of endorsers' arguments was forecast for the meeting.

Prominent among those who will address the sessions is Prof. Stephen Duggan, director of the Institute of International Education, who will speak on "Population and Peace."

The storm of statements and counter-statements began early last month when a mass meeting of birth control advocates resolved information on control methods should be made available to all mothers on public relief—in accordance with their religious convictions.

Patrick Cardinal Hayes, of the Diocese of New York, immediately took up the cudgels in opposition to birth control, characterizing subscribers to a policy of birth control as "prophets of decadence."

Japan Sees Parity With U.S. Navy as First Move Toward Friendship

Japan's chief pride is in her navy. Above, the fleet and naval planes as they passed in review before the Mikado in one of the greatest naval maneuvers in history some time ago.

Tokyo greeted the navy with confetti during the celebration last June of Japan's victory over Russia in the Sea of Japan 30 years ago. Above, a recent parade of the fleet.

Regret Over Failure At Parley Very Keen

Tokyo Feels Its Peaceful Intentions Vis-a-Vis Britain and America Have Not Been Fully Understood.

By K. K. Kawakami.

None, perhaps, regrets more deeply than the Japanese themselves their failure to arrive at an agreement at the London naval conference. The chief reason lies in their feeling that Japan's peaceful intentions vis-a-vis America and Britain have been unrequited and that the powers have not given due consideration to her peculiar political position and her peculiar economic needs and requirements.

Above all, the Japanese regret that they have to admit, however reluctantly, that the chief nation which is at loggerheads with them on the question of naval armament is the United States, with which they have every desire to be friendly, and which, as they see it, has no reason to fear them.

At the London conference Mr. Norman H. Davis is reported to have put to Admiral Osami Nagano this blunt question: "Why should you want naval parity with us when you know we have no desire to attack you?" If the Japanese were capable of being equally blunt, the question could evoke but one answer in the form of this rejoinder: "Why should you object to parity if you have no intention to attack us, and when you know we mean no harm to you?"

Tokyo Reported Fearful of U. S.

Surprising as it may seem to many Americans, Japan entertains a genuine fear of the American Navy. She fears that the American Navy, with a strength of 5 as against Japan's 3, is not merely capable of attacking her in her own waters, but intends so to use that strength some day.

At a congenial gathering during the preliminary naval parley held in London a year ago, Admiral Standley, so the story goes, gave Admiral Yamamoto a friendly slap on the back and said jokingly, "We will go over to your side and lick you with our present ratio." If the Japanese took the joke seriously it was not because of their proverbial lack of the sense of humor.

Before that good-natured backslapping at London, American admirals, including Mr. Standley himself, had declared solemnly and in no uncertain terms that under the present ratio their fighting fleet was powerful enough to cross the Pacific and engage the Japanese Navy in Japanese waters. They agreed that in the event of trouble between Japan and America, the only region where the American Navy expected to confront the Japanese was on the Japanese side of the Pacific. They also agreed that the Japanese navy, under the present ratio, could not and would not cross the Pacific to face the American fleet.

To the Japanese America appears as a nation of conquerors, a believer in the "manifest destiny." She conquered a great continent, vanquished and almost exterminated its original inhabitants, and took vast territories from her neighbors.

Old War Cries Quoted Again.

Few Americans have forgotten the age when this continent of theirs resounded with the cries of "Fifty-four forty or fight!" "The whole of Oregon or none!" "The reoccupation of Oregon and reannexation of Texas!" etc. And when there were no more frontiers wherewith to "satisfy the feet of the young men" within this continent, "the new frontiers in the Indies and in the far Pacific," as Woodrow Wilson puts it, "came to them (American people)" as if out of the very necessity for the new career set before them."

When that came to pass the American people readily accepted the consequences of the war, and even hailed the conquests of their fleets and armies. To the Japanese, love of adventure remains a dominant American characteristic. Will not the same love blossom forth into some grand naval adventure in the name of the open door, the Kellogg Pact, the nine-power treaty for China, or what have you?

Needless to say that this American quality is admired by the Japanese, for the Japanese themselves are something of adventurers. This, however, does not alter the fact that the Japanese view the American Navy under the 5-5-3 ratio restriction with genuine apprehension, and that this apprehension breeds fear and suspicion, always disturbing factors in international relations.

To remove that apprehension, then, is the first step toward cementing mutual friendliness between Japan and America, and the way to remove it, the Japanese believe, is to establish parity between the two navies, reducing at the same time the maximum strength of both, the so-called common upper limit, far below the existing level. To effect such a program Japan is prepared to reduce the size and armaments of capital ships and aircraft carriers, or even to abolish them entirely. In all sincerity, the Japanese believe that naval parity will dissipate one potent source of Japanese fear and suspicions, and will to that extent promote mutual respect and mutual friendliness.

The Japanese find it difficult to accept the American theory that equality of security can be obtained without equality of naval armament. Obviously there can be no equality of security when one navy is powerful enough to cross a vast ocean and confront another navy in the latter's own waters, while this latter navy is so small that it must perforce be tied to its home moorings. That is the relative position of the American and Japanese navies under the present ratio.

Furthermore, the question of security cannot be determined by armament alone, but inevitably brings forth the questions of natural resources, territory, population and other cognate factors affecting the nations involved. When these questions are considered, the American position is incomparably securer than the Japanese.

Admiral Sir Herbert Richmond, Vere Harmsworth professor of naval history at Cambridge University, in his scholarly book, "Sea Power in the Modern World," divides naval powers into two categories. One consists of "those nations for whom the development of sea power was the result of natural or spontaneous economic or social movements." In the case of such nations, "trade and colonies were the definite expression of a national spirit, of the genius, character and activity of the people themselves, needing no lead from their rulers."

In the other category Sir Herbert puts "those nations who, themselves not dependent upon trade or territory but desiring it for the added wealth and strength and influence which it would confer, strove to acquire that which others had established."

That the Japanese navy belongs to the first category is generally admitted. A glance at the map and a study of Japan's natural resources are enough to arrive at this conclusion.

Japan consists of small islands—small in area and in natural resources. Her land area is about half the size of Texas, while her population is ten times that of that State.

Due, primarily, to the mountainous nature of Japan's topography, the average area of arable land for each of Japan's population, urban and rural, is only one quarter of an acre. Thirty-five per cent of our farming families cultivate less than 1.22 acres each, 34 per cent between 1.22 and 2.45 acres each, and thirty-one per cent more than 2.45 each.

The arable area attached to each farming family is only one as compared with 31 in the United States, 16 in Denmark, 9 in England, 6 in Sweden, 5 in Germany, 3 in Ireland.

This, however, is only half the story of Japan's plight. In her endeavors to support her large and growing population by industrializing herself, she encounters a great obstacle in her lack of essential materials—oil, cotton, iron, wool, lumber, coal manganese, salt, rubber, and what not. Japan has ventured forth into Korea and Manchuria, but these countries fall far short of meeting her requirements. She must go far afield to obtain the raw materials of industry, which means that her navy must be prepared to keep sea lanes open at all times.

In contrast America can, if she will, be a totalitarian, an autarchial nation, vast in area, vast in resources, vast in population. Which means that America enjoys an incomparably greater security than Japan. Moreover, America's neighbors are either physically so small or politically and militarily so impotent that a mere word of warning or a mere withdrawal of recognition of their governments usually produces the result desired by her.

On the other hand, Japan's immediate neighbors occupy continents beside her small isles. One of these neighbors sprawls over two continents, covering an area 30 times as large as Japan's, and is still expanding. The Soviet Union, with natural resources not only enormous but diverse, is potentially a self-supporting nation, boasting, moreover, an army of 1,300,000 men, re-inforced by 13,000,000 "civilian soldiers." China, too, has more than 1,000,000 men armed. In point of morale and equipment these Chinese soldiers are not an immediate cause of serious worry to Japan; but they are decidedly a disturbing factor in that they consider themselves powerful enough to defy any foreign power, which, indeed, caused the Manchurian conflagration of 1931.

All this leads to only one conclusion—that even if the American navy were smaller than the Japanese, America would have a greater degree of security than Japan.

American naval experts argue that, inasmuch as America must protect both the Atlantic and the Pacific, she must have a navy much larger than that of Japan. They would have us believe that they could never concentrate their entire fleet in the Pacific even in the event of trouble with Japan.

The answer to this reasoning is that before America embarks upon naval operations against Japan, she will have arrived at an understanding with England so that she might withdraw her fleet from the Atlantic. England would be but too glad to enter into such an understanding, for an American-Japanese war would mean to England killing two birds with one stone—checkmating or even destroying Japan's growing influence in the Far East, and crippling the American navy to which Britain conceded parity but reluctantly. At this writing Japan is stirred by the disclosure by an American author that in 1919, on the eve of the Washington naval conference, Lord Lee of Fareham, then First Lord of the Admiralty, advanced the suggestion that the British fleet might guard the Atlantic in the event of America's trouble with Japan, thus enabling the American navy to muster its full strength in the Pacific.

U. S. Proposal Called Superficial.

At London the American delegation proposed that all navies be reduced by 20 per cent. The proposal is superficial and impracticable, if not deceptive. The 23 per cent which the American navy would scrap would consist of obsolete, superfluous ships which it is but too glad to get rid of. But let that pass. Any horizontally equal reduction of all navies works to the advantage of the bigger fleets and spells injustice to the smaller. You cannot justly cut by 20 per cent both a $600-a-year salary and a $1,000-a-year salary. The same mathematical consideration applies to naval reduction. Only when the major navies are put upon equal footing is it possible to apply a common yardstick for equal reduction. Once this is recognized, Japan is prepared to cut her navy by 50 per cent, not to speak of 20 per cent. That, she contends, is the only way to effect a drastic naval reduction and the surest way to secure the peace of the Pacific.

To the Japanese, American naval policy, like Janus, has two faces. On the Atlantic side, America is determined to pursue a policy of non-interference, so much so that she is ready to renounce her traditional principle of the freedom of the seas, at a sacrifice of billions of dollars in trade. On the Pacific side she insists upon the open door in China, even at the risk of war with Japan, though this open door, in the economic sense, is not an asset but a liability to America.

Our Interests There Estimated.

The American stake in China, in terms of dollars and cents, is estimated at $230,000,000, of which more than $80,000,000 represents missionary enterprises. Roughly speaking, out of the balance of $150,000,000 representing commercial enterprises, $50,000,000 is the purchase price of the Shanghai Power Co.; $40,000,000 is the book value of the oil installations and other commercial properties; another $40,000,000 represents principal and interest on defaulted loans, and unpaid bills for materials purchased by the Chinese government. And as for American trade with China, for every dollar of profit made by American merchants $1.50 or more is handed back to China for "uplift" enterprises, not including the cost of maintaining American soldiers and American warships for the protection of that trade.

American interest in the open door, then, is confined to the uncertain prospect of future profitable trade. But such profitable trade as is envisaged by America will never materialize unless and until China's million bandit-soldiers are disbanded and her house is put in order. As Lord Beresford once said, the open door is of no use when the room inside is in chaos. Obviously, America could not and would not undertake to put the Chinese room in order. Why, then, so much ado about the open door when she is ready to abandon even the freedom of the seas, emphasizing neutrality alike toward aggressors and defenders? The inconsistency disturbs the Japanese. Can it be, they ask, that America is intent upon picking a quarrel with them?

North China Issue Affects Many Nations, Says General Ho

Chief of Hunan Province Urges World Move for Peace.

By Mark J. Ginsbourg.

Shanghai, Dec. 20 (by mail).—The Great Game of Politics, as it is played in China, does not differ from the American variety. The country is divided into segments, large or small, each ruled by a "boss." The latter collects and disburses revenues, builds roads and schools, maintains a standing army of hundreds of thousands of men, and, in his leisure hours, dreams of expanding his domain at the expense of less adroit neighbors.

Some bosses shun notice. Others throw off shackles of obscurity to crash into world headlines. Such are Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, China's nearest approach to a dictator; Gen. Chen Chi-tang, "the strong man of the south"; and Gen. Sung Che-hyuan, who by virtue of his own adaptability and the grace of the Nipponese army, became the "boss" of North China.

Few Chinese leaders run their political machines with the precision and skill of Gen. Ho Chien, governor of Hunan and one of the best known "bosses." For years Hunan has formed a buffer between Nanking and the southwest. All these years Gen. Ho governed his province with wisdom and justice, fought the communists, and exhibited a superb diplomatic talent in keeping Hunan neutral in the constant internecine conflicts.

Gen. Ho Deeply Interested In Cultural Matters.

In November, when the nation's leaders assembled in Nanking to patch up old differences and seek "the way out," Gen. Ho played an important role in the deliberations. The following month, after a brief junket here, Gen. Ho was again at the capital, together with other members of the all-powerful central executive committee, wrestling with China's domestic and foreign policies.

Gen. Ho is an extraordinary figure in Chinese politics. Although a graduate of a military academy, a strategist of enviable reputation and the commander-in-chief of a well-trained army of 100,000, he shuns military arts. He likes to be known as a dexterous calligraphist, a thoughtful student of Chinese classics, a patron of fine arts. His free moments he devotes to the study of philosophy, and Confucianism occupies the central position in his political scheme of things.

Renowned for his skill in steering clear of "entangling alliances," Gen. Ho describes himself as an internationalist. China to him is a member of the family of nations, China's ills are the corollary of universal maladies, which can only be cured by concerted action.

Communism Is Branded Most Serious Problem.

Communism, he told this correspondent at his modest two-room suite in a hotel here, is China's most serious internal problem.

"There are two ways to root out the Communist movement: One is to employ the mailed fist; the other, and the fundamental remedy for the Communist disease, is education. Communism can be fought by reconverting its adherents."

Hunan, which once shared with Kiangsi the reputation of a Communist hotbed, still has, according to Gen. Ho, about 20,000 reds, armed with 10,000 rifles.

"The extermination of the reds is merely a question of time," Gen. Ho declared confidently, "as they cannot escape from the circle of blockhouses and troops which surrounds them."

Gen. Ho's optimism was partly disproved a week later by reports that the Communist armies have escaped from the steel ring, once again to go on a rampage in northwestern and central Hunan, only 90 miles from Changsha, the provincial capital.

In communism Gen. Ho found a proof of his contention that most of China's ills have their roots in foreign soil.

"China's troubles," he said emphatically, punctuating his sentences with taps on the table, "are not of her own making. They have almost always been caused by external forces. Thus is communism. The serious developments in North China also have their origin abroad.

"Our country will enjoy peace only when it comes to all other nations of the world. International peace provides probably the only solution for China's and universal problems. Cultural co-operation among the nations of the world is one of the ways to achieve international peace and understanding."

The problem of North China, which an audacious Japanese major general has almost overnight added to Nippon's ever-expanding domain, is not, according to Gen. Ho, a purely Chinese issue. It affects foreign interests as well, and other powers should aid in finding the solution to the northern riddle.

"The whole range of North China problems was thoroughly thrashed out at the fifth national congress of the Kuomintang (China's ruling party). The congress, which was marked by a significant unanimity among leaders from all corners of the country, decided to intrust the government with the formulation of the policy on the question.

"When these policies are decided, all Chinese political and military leaders will support and carry them out. These policies will undoubtedly have peace as their object. The problem of North China is one of the most vital facing the nation today. If China is to be saved from the crisis, the northern issue must be settled promptly.

"China and Japan," Gen. Ho went on without stopping, "are very intimately interrelated. They come of the same racial stock, they possess the same culture, they both follow the teachings of Confucius. All these factors tend to make them close friends. Japan is interested as much as China in stamping out the evil of communism. However, what Japan is doing now is exactly the opposite of what could be expected."

Gen. Ho answered readily a question which must have vexed him time and again during the six years of his stewardship of the buffer province—the question of Nanking-Southwest rapprochement.

"The ghost of misunderstanding," he said, "has often in the past hounded Nanking and Canton, as the southwestern leaders did not know what the government's policies were, while the central authorities had little inkling of the views of the southwest. Because of this, many foreign observers thought that China was divided. That this view is incorrect has been conclusively proved by the presence of so many delegates from China's southwest at the Congress of the Kuomintang."

"Both Nanking and the southwest," he added, "have a common aim—to extricate China from her present crisis. All national leaders are now closely co-operating to accomplish this object."

The standard question of any Chinese interview: "What do you think of dictatorship" Gen. Ho answered in writing. In beautifully neat characters he quickly put down:

"The policies of a nation are made by many; only one can execute them to good purpose."

Gen. Chiang Spurned Dictatorship Chance.

"The suggestion that Gen. Chiang Kai-shek be made China's dictator," he added, "was advanced by certain individuals in Nanking while the congress was in session. The congress itself did not discuss the matter. Being a humble man, Gen. Chiang firmly turned down the suggestion, which was then dropped."

Asked if his province would co-operate with the Central Government in the currency reform program, Gen. Ho Chien replied with an emphatic affirmative.

"We shall whole-heartedly co-operate with the finance ministry in its currency reforms. The notes of the Central government are already enjoying wide circulation in Hunan. However, notes issued by the Hunan Provincial Bank will remain in circulation, pending negotiations with the finance ministry regarding their disposal and the establishment of a currency reserve board in Hunan."

The interview came to an end. With an infectious smile, which had remained on his face during a greater part of the conversation, he bowed the interviewer out.

Two days later he left for Nanking. A score of gowned officials braved rain and cold wind to bid farewell. The characteristic Chinese show of politeness continued for half an hour, while guards, with drawn revolvers, scanned the faces of passers-by. A shrill whistle, and with a last "adieu," Gen. Ho disappeared in his compartment.

Letters of Philo the Penguin

By H. I. Phillips

Dear Ed: Since everybody is talking about this here Townsend or Plenty-of-Patooties-for-Pappy Plan, I might as well talk about it, too. It is the topic of the month and no matter whether you think the plan a dizzy dream or a swell idea you can have a lot of good clean fun listening to the arguments. Little else is talked of around the cracker barrels and iron stoves this winter.

• • • •

The father of the plan is Dr. Townsend and I am surprised that any doctor stops at $200 a month when so many doctors get that much for a tonsil removal. The proposition is to have Uncle Sam, who is getting more and more like Santa Claus every day, pay $200 a month to all persons over 60 years of age. Realizing the tendency of a guy over 60 to hoard his money, the plan prevents the old folks from sticking the money away in socks, teapots and horse collars by making it compulsory for them to blow in the $200 within the month, it being the doctor's contention that keeping so much money in constant circulation will prevent hard times.

• • • •

In other words, Uncle Sam would distribute about two billion ironmen a month to the pappies and grandpappies of the land on their promise that they would scatter it around like sailors on shore leave. Personally, I think the old folks should get a break, and the way money is being hurled around these days I would rather see them get it than some of the boys who are grabbing it, but I think the strain of spending nearly $50 a week would be pretty terrific especially when it is compulsory and has to be done in a time limit.

• • • •

Millions of men past 60 in this country never made that much money in their most agile and resourceful days, and they were raised to save for the rainy day. The stern order to take $50 a week and blow it all in by Saturday night would in itself be too much for many of them to stand, and even a fellow who had always done pretty well as a spender in his younger days would probably work himself into a physical decline trying to blow in his weekly income with the minimum delay.

• • • •

With everybody over 60 handed $50 a week and turned loose with instructions to get rid of it by the end of the week, it might boom business while they lasted but how long would they last at that pace? And what business would be boomed?

• • • •

Most people think of a man over 60 as an old bird with whiskers and a crutch, but it is surprising how many spry fellows you will meet who are well beyond that age, and I wouldn't be a bit surprised if the businesses most benefited would be the movies, the roller skating rinks and the ten-cents-a-dance halls, not to mention the musical comedies and night clubs.

• • • •

I have some relatives over 60 years of age, and with $50 a week spending money I wouldn't be a bit surprised to see 'em taking a fling at everything from stratosphere balloon flights and marathon dancing to roulette and the ponies. Not that I want to seem unfair. I don't see why a man over 60 hasn't as much right to blow in his money recklessly as a young man has, particularly when the government almost insists on it. Certainly it ain't just natural to expect that the folks who get $50 a week to spend in jig time are going to spend it on items like repapering the living room, buying new parlor curtains, building rock gardens and having the piano tuned. They're going to have some fun and they would be chumps if they didn't, say I.

• • • •

Which is neither here nor there. How they spend $2,400 a year, if they get it, is their own business and all I ask is that they scatter it well. What I am interested in are all the arguments that just now are filling the day and night with tumult. To listen to a Townsendite you would think that $50 a week spending money was a mere bagatelle, and something the old folks had been accustomed to all their lives. To listen to the opponents you would think that the old folks were all running around in eight cylinder sedans in luxury, and that the only people who needed help and needed it fast were the people under 60 who were footing the bills.

• • • •

Of course, there is some middle ground and I think you will find Congress passing a bill giving people over 60 years of age some financial help, although I do not think it will be anything like $50 a week, which is more than a lot of millionaires have had to spend during the last three years. The one thing certain is that Dr. Townsend and his followers are going to play an exciting part in this campaign and that the politicians are going to get a wonderful workout.

• • • •

I don't know how many million folks over 60 there are in the United States of Hysteria, but they represent enough votes to scare the hardiest politician, and you have to add to their number the millions who feel like 60, as the saying goes.

• • • •

Then there must be great numbers, who anticipate being 60, who are uncertain just how old they are and who will be determined to be over 60 once the Government begins pumping out red-hot money to the "dole folks" at home.

• • • •

I am thinking of passing the 60 mark myself. All the witnesses have disappeared and I don't see how anybody could contradict me or would want to. There are times lately, when I feel like 100 and if I insist I am over 60 and could use $50 a week, I don't see how anybody can turn me down, particularly if I satisfy them that I am in good shape to spend it as fast as the next fellow and as indiscriminately.

• • • •

Then when we give the young folks $50 a week there will come a cry from the middle-aged ones. Ultimately, I suppose the children will want weekly spending money from Uncle Sam, too.

• • • •

But there is no sense in joking about it too much as it is no joke. Dr. Townsend has the politicians jumping through paper hoops and he has a swell chance of getting something from them. Where the money is coming from I don't know. But what of that? The American people stopped wondering over a little thing like that months ago. Two billion a year? Why, it's just pin money, boys, just pin money.

Yours for more spending money all around.

A Great Artist.

Above any author of recent date, Rudyard Kipling affected political policies. Above any author of modern times, he contributed enduring phrases to the vernacular. His fame, however, rests on no such foundation.

The body of his poems survives its imperialism because the poems were greater than that one of their many themes. When he sang of the far-flung empire, he moved every Anglo-Saxon who believed in imperialism—and in those days such Anglo-Saxons needed an astronomer to estimate their number. But alike when Kipling celebrated the Red Gods calling from across the world or chanted the lovliness of a peaceful countryside, he struck notes to which all young men, and most old men, dreaming of the past or planning for the future, must respond always and everywhere.

A not dissimilar spirit informed his best fiction. It was a brain more than versatile which could produce stories so different in content, yet so uniform in excellence, as 'Kim" and "Captains Courageous;" could give us the horror of "The End of the Passage" and the humor of "Soldiers Three," could create a Stalky one year and a Melvaney the next. These deeds bear the mark of a master.

There may be a score of elements that make for literary immortality; there are two which seldom fail to secure it. Both of them Rudyard Kipling preeminently possessed. By his ability to make music which echoes in the ordinary human heart and by his power to devise and tell that of greatest rarity, a good story, his fame is fixed.

Paper Landslides.

One fact stands out in this week's Institute of Public Opinion poll on Franklin D. Roosevelt. The recent gains in popular vote have been offset by losses in the electoral college. The President's popular majority now stands at its November level of 53 per cent, having recovered from the fractional sag last month. Since November, however, Michigan, New York, Colorado and Illinois have moved from the Democratic electoral column. Illinois records a Republican lead; the vote in the other three is evenly divided.

The present poll shows no change in the net popular vote compared with November. There have been shifts, but gains have offset losses. Most gains, however, are in the solidly Democratic South. Most losses have been in the border-line States of the Middle West, where they served to shift electoral totals.

This 53 per cent for Roosevelt contrasts sharply with the 38 per cent of the Literary Digest's 2,000,000 straw voters who favored "the Roosevelt New Deal." The wording is partly responsible. The Institute of Public Opinion has proved in the past that the President is more popular than his policies. Both NRA and AAA were opposed by Institute majorities before the Supreme Court killed them.

Another difference probably lies in polling methods. The Literary Digest's large number of ballots are profusely scattered over the country. But the Institute's questionnaires are scientifically placed. Its researchers have found that certain groups are especially resistant to postcard polls. Few farmers or relieft clients trouble to answer them, and the ratio is sometimes as low as one response to 500 ballots at the bottom of the economic scale.

The Institute allows for such variations. And in a campaign in which class divisions are being far too strongly emphasized, such corrections are essential if the poll is to be realistic.

A Candid Candidate.

An object lesson in good politics is contained in the extracts from a letter addressed by A. P. Herbert to the electors of Oxford University appearing on this page today. That letter was effective enough to seat Mr. Herbert in the House of Commons.

From the sections quoted, it is apparent that there was neither bombast nor servility in Mr. Herbert's bid for support. On the contrary, his concluding sentiment that "I shall not always be right but you may be sure that I shall be bold and vigorous," recalls the famous eighteenth century address of Edmund Burke to the electors of Bristol. That candidate assured the voters that, if elected, he would feel himself under no compulsion to accept their directions but would consider that he had been authorized by them to use his best judgment on the problems of the day.

As for agriculture, Mr. Herbert wrote, "I know nothing of agriculture." As for a plan to restore world trade, he has none. But "there will be 613 members of the new Parliament who have; and I shall support that plan which, after debate, appears to me to be best."

There is no recommendation like candor. Aspirant legislators in other countries might study Mr. Herbert's straightforward technique to good advantage and ponder why a thesis successful with a limited electorate is so seldom used where voting qualifications are broad.

Sanctions Plus Elasticity.

Germany's intense interest in the Italian conquest of Ethiopia and in the League of Nation's sanctions has long been apparent. Every statesman knows that Hitler's tactics in attempting to regain Germany's lost colonies will be in large part determined by the outcome of the present struggle. The significant aspect of the speech by Dr. Goebbels, Nazi minister of propaganda, is that he frankly admits Germany is merely waiting for an appropriate time to present her colonial demands.

If Mussolini's policy of aggression to relieve Italy's internal economic problems should succeed, the way would be immediately open for the Nazi regime to seek repossession of former German colonies by force. And if the League should fail to restrain Italy, there would not be much ground for hope that it could more effectively curtail German aggression. The official declaration at Berlin that "the time is coming when we must demand colonies" should bring about, therefore, an appreciable stiffening of the Geneva attitude toward the Italian enterprise. Especially in France, the truly stupendous issues at stake in the sanctions program will stand out more clearly.

Reaction to this potential Nazi demand can not logically stop, however, with a tightening of the thumb-screws on Italy. As Anthony Eden aptly said in his first address as foreign secretary of Great Britain, "we must all try to look beyond the immediate conflict with which the League is confronted and keep a firm hold of a few simple essentials." Taking a "realistic" attitude, he suggests: First, that aggression should not be allowed to succeed, and, second, that unity and strength among League members should be employed to teach any would-be aggressor that peaceful negotiation is the "only successful way of removing discontents."

Mr. Eden's emphasis upon peaceful adjustment of acute international problems assumes special importance because of its coincidence with the Nazis' new bid for colonies. If Germany seeks by peaceful means to regain overseas possessions, reasonable concessions will certainly have to be considered. No doubt that is what Mr. Eden had in mind when he told the Engineering Employers Association:

> If a collective peace system is to be effective it must possess two characteristics, strength and elasticity—strength in order that aggression may be effectively discouraged, elasticity in order that some of the causes of war may be removed through the promotion by consent of necessary changes when the time is ripe for them to take place.

Advocacy of this intelligent viewpoint is far easier than its application to a specific problem. In dealing with Italy before the present crisis arose the powers largely responsible for shaping the policies of the League gave all too little heed to the elasticity which Mr. Eden now finds so desirable. Will the irrepressible German demand for colonies be more skillfully met? Even if sanctions against Italy prove to be 100 per cent effective, this bigger problem looming up in the background will be only half solved.

The Coolidge Resignation.

The resignation of Undersecretary of the Treasury oolidge recalls the earlier withdrawals from from public office of such budgetary and financial experts as Lewis W. Douglas, Prof. O. M. W. Sprague and Dean Acheson.

All these men were eager to serve the Rooseelt Administration and sympathetic toward many New Deal policies. But they knew that no legislative program, howeer admirable in purpose or ideal in aim, can further the public welfare unless th ecountry can afford it. Financial experts realize as the public at large seldom does, that the cost of carrying out any specific proposal has to be weighed when considering its specific mesits. They understand that the rst concern of a responsible government is the preseration of its credit. If that is seriously impaired, the bottom drops out of all reforms.

It is not mere coincidence, therefore, that several able officials closely connected with the fiscal operations of the Goernment should have tendered their resignations at times when the Adminstration was under heavy fire either for failure to curb spending or for adherence to fallacious monetary theories. Lewis W. Douglas, for instance, resigned as Director of the Budget when he lost hope of being able to check the mounting tide of expenditures. Mr. Coolidge no doubt has experienced a similar feeling of discouragement when confronted by the present chaotic budgetary situation.

The ease with which loans have been floated to finance New Deal projects is no eidence of any impregnable condition of the Federal credit. The Treasury has relied almost exclusively upon short-term issues to meet current uncoered expneditures, and at the present time less than half the outstanding debt is represented by long-term bonds. Furthermore, the banks of the country hold over half the obligations of the Goernment. Thus the existence of a huge oating debt and the lack of a broad inestment demand for Federal offerings emphasizes the danger of present tendencies.

Retrenchment is essential as a preliminary to correction of these unsound conditions. In the absence of any evidence that economy is in prospect, it is not surprising that Mr. Coolidge should feel that his continuance in office is not "advisable." To remain would commit him to the active furtherance and tacit endorsement of fiscal policies that every thoughtful citizen iews with alarm.

The President's Bonus Views.

President Roosevelt's consistent opposition to cash payment of the bonus offers no encouragement whatever to those Congressmen who think that the specious devices of current legislation will serve to meet his clear-cut objections.

The President justified his veto message of last May on the general ground that the Patman bill would have called for payment of a much larger sum than was contemplated in the 1924 settlement, and that it destroyed the insurance protection provided for the dependents of the veterans. He referred to the generous provisions for sick and injured former service men and the special consideration given to the veterans in employment policy. He rejected the argument that the mere spending of money would hasten recovery and denounced the attempt at "political coercion by minorities."

Other objections in principle to any plan for anticipating the maturity date of the bonus certificates are as cogent now as then. And the President buttressed them when he emphasized the danger of increasing the size of the Federal deficit by voting new outlays without making provision for covering them. "I invite your attention," he said, "to the fact that solely from the point of view of the good credit of the United States, the complete failure of the Congress to provide additional taxes for an additional expenditure of this magnitude would in itself and by itself alone warrant disapproval of this measure."

Without making specific reference to the bonus, the President again made it clear in his recent budget message that he thoroughly disapproves of any kind of legislation during the present session that would "impose additional charges upon the Treasury for which provision is not already made in this budget." He strongly stressed the importance of adding no new expenditures "unless provision is made for additional revenue to meet their cost."

It is obvious that President Roosevelt has taken a firmly reasoned stand that precludes approval of any plan for anticipating bonus payments. The recent budget message perhaps conveys a hint that he might approve a bill which appropriated taxes fully covering the additional outlays involved. But neither the House nor the Senate measure makes such provision. Hence both would be assured of veto for purely fiscal reasons, even if the President should be prepared to withdraw his objections in principle to bonus legislation. Mr. Roosevelt has no need to reaffirm an intention to use the veto power in this connection. The record speaks for him.

Off The Marigold Standard.

Time was when a garden was precisely what the dictionary defined it—a piece of ground for growing flowers. A few annuals, a rosebush or two and maybe a trellis, a sprinkling of perennials, a little border of evergreens and the job was done. Then came the specialists! And we got Japanese gardens in bowls for the living room table; old English gardens in carefully assorted packages ready for assembling; rock gardens that resemble nothing else on earth so much as rock gardens; and formal gardens which are composed mostly of paths, benches and coy stone statuary. Out of this Caligari's Cabinet of verdure emerged the garden books and magazines, pointing the way to that complexity for which the human soul inexplicably yearns.

Up to now, we have been disposed to take all such changes with a grin and a grain of salt. After all, the present mode of living does seem suited to terrarium gardening. But the modernists have not stopped with crossing orchids, naming amaryllis after First Ladies, and supervising penthouse planting. They are now laying hands on the old-fashioned garden and daring to bring its contents up to date. The marigold, that tawny, tousled companion of the sunflower and the mignonette, now has a brood of "eugenic offspring" which are said to be far superior to their forebears. As proof let it be noted that one of this new generation of the specie which Keats called "Ye ardent marigolds" has been christened "Radio Golden Beam."

Notable advances have been effected from grafting. The despiking of cactus delighted not only horticulturists but the whole West. But when an old-fashioned posy is described as having a "wind-blown, wholly informal appearance that has won it many friends," it is time to throw up the trowel. Next thing we know some enterprising florist will be advertising it as "ye olde marigolde."

$4,000,000,000 More.

From the Morning Oregonian

In the sessions of 1933, 1934 and 1935, Mr. Roosevelt's personal desires and his impressions as to public opinion fixed the relief system. It is probable that in the coming session the Congress will force Mr. Roosevelt to take into consideration what they have learned, as well as his own more remote conclusions.

And it is clear that this change in attitude finds the President in an embarrassed situation. His promises to give the unemployed work rather than the dole have made a return to direct relief almost impossible, certainly improbable. Yet that part of the $4,880,000,000 fund which has been set aside for WPA is scheduled for exhaustion at the end of the fiscal year, June 30. And to maintain 3,000,000 or 3,500,000 on work relief from June 30, 1936, to June 30, 1937, would require at least $4,000,000,000 more.

I don't know what Beulah is going to say and what's more, I don't care. Just to think, this is the first time in over 30 years that I haven't gotten home on time. Yes siree! Makes a man feel sort of important, like breaking over the traces. And it's kind of neighborly in here with all these people and the car moving along nice and slow. I don't see what everybody's complaining about.

I knew something like this was a'coming all the time. I says to Miss Pitkin only yesterday—she's in my office—we city folks are putting too much dependence in electricity and the likes. All we got to do, I says to Miss Pitkin, is press a button and we get lights and ice and heat and movin' pictures and fire for cooking. And it's unnatural for things to come so easy.

When I was a boy, we had candlelight and firelight. Then when Beulah and I married, we moved to the city and found gas light. It used to splutter and make awful shadows on the wall, but I remember Beulah's hair was kind of pretty under that flickering light. Ah, well, times have changed.

Won't the neighbors' eyes pop when I don't get in at 6:10? Gee whillikens, this derned subway has stopped again! I bet Beulah'll be fit to burn. Oh, well, a man can't get home on time every night . . .

I'm glad we stopped and I hope we stay here for hours. It's nice to be in a crowd of people and hear men's voices and babies crying and the crackling of newspapers. And besides, I like to look at that lady opposite in all those beautiful furs and with her hair shiny like gold. I bet she has manicures and everything and doesn't even have to wash her own stockings. That's the way I'm going to have things when I get to be a famous actress.

If I could only get my name in the papers because I'd saved somebody's life or something, I'd have a better chance to talk to some producer. Tonight, for instance, suppose there had been a stampede and I had jumped up and started reciting the Balcony scene and quieted the crowd! Instead, everything had to go off as peaceful as if it had been planned by the subway company.

But I guess I've just got to be patient like Miss Cornell was and my chance will come. If I were back in Smithville now, I'd just be setting the table for dinner and the lights would be going on all over town and the kids would be doing their evening chores.

But that's not what I want. I want to be like that lady sitting opposite me . . .

Oh, this car can't stop, it just can't. Terry said he would telephone me tonight at 6 and give me one more chance and if I don't answer the phone, he will think that I have decided not to go with him.

He's so silly, so impetuous, that I don't know what would happen to him if I didn't stand by. I guess he never appreciated that until he thought I was going to sign up and go to Hollywood. If he had any sense at all, he would know I'd give up my career in a minute to marry him if he only asked. But he thinks I'm all tied up in the lights of Broadway, and cocktail parties, and rehearsals, and getting my name at the head of the cast.

And tonight, of all nights, I would decide to take a subway just for fun! It's sort of queer that this should happen. I wonder if it means I shouldn't marry Terry and go off to some little town and settle down in bungalow aprons. But that's ridiculous. I've been over all this ground before and I know how I'd be happiest. Any litle girl who comes to New York and thinks there's nothing in life but the stage is just a fool.

That kid sitting opposite me looks the way I did ten years ago. She is watching me as if she would give anything in the world to be wearing this fur coat and these silly flowers. And I would give everything I possess at this moment to look like her again and get home on time to get Terry's call and tell him that all I want is to make a home for him.

God, when I think of all the girls in New York with that look in their eyes! There I go, getting excited over somebody I never saw before and never will again. Besides, she's not the type who'd give up everything for the sake of a career. She's just a nice little home girl who never heard of Kit Cornell or me . . .

I think I'll write a story about getting tied up like this in a subway with a lot of strangers. I guess it has been done before, but then, what hasn't? All these editors looking for something new give me a pain in the neck. There isn't anything new—just love, and death, and birth, and jealousy. And sometimes lights off in the subway . . .

Take for instance, that blonde, painted dame right across from me. I bet she hasn't got a thought in the world but clothes and cocktails with just the right proportion of gin and maybe a man somewhere in the distance with a big car and a fat cigar. She wouldn't know what it was to give it all up for a man and settle down and make a home for him. She's got a copy of Variety in her hand—guess she's one of those stage-door ghosts who never quite make the grade—that is, beyond a walk-on part.

And this little girl sitting next to me. She's sweet looking and reminds me of a lot of things I thought I had forgotten. She's so utterly foreign to that actressy-looking fur-coat on the other side of the aisle. She'll have a bunch of kids some day and big dinners on Sunday and New York will be just a name that she has known and forgotten. No stage door stuff for her. She's the real thing . . .

Maybe I could do a story about that meek looking little man over there. His eyes are so pale and washed-out looking you'd think he had spent most of his life under water. I guess he's just one of those lonesome guys who never looked at a woman. He's going to some hall bedroom and tinker around and then go to bed. It's a pity a man like that didn't get married when he was young . . .

Aw, hell, what's the use of trying to think up plots in connection with this crowd of straphangers. They're so typical it's almost pathetic. Why, you can just look at them and read their whole lives in their faces. Or at least I can. Maybe that's because I'm a writer and used to sizing up human nature . . .

BETT HOOPER.

Between Siestas

By Jeffrey Paul.

Mexico City.

TEXAS will celebrate her hundredth anniversary of independence from Mexico next year. I imagine the oratory will be quite profound and the names of the Austins, Houston, Crockett, Bowie, Travis, Fannin, Lamar and other heroes of the early days will be honored as they deserve to be honored. The literary winds are already blowing several novels and other works on Texas into the foreground of public attention. One contribution to the celebration must be the remark of a witty Mexican: "I don't imagine Texas will bother to invite us to the festivities!"

Another, and in some ways far more important, celebration that took place during 1935 was one in honor of the setting up of the first printing press in the Western Hemisphere in 1535. The shop where the press was assembled is still standing and, strangely enough, is occupied by a printing shop. A beautiful commemorative volume on the inception of printing, and the books, bookmen and printers of the sixteenth century in Mexico, made its appearance during the past year.

• • • •

Among all the strikes that have plagued Mexico in recent months, none has had such tragi-comic possibilities as the "tortilla strike" of unlamented memory. Those people who make the city streets resound with their "pat-pat-pat" all day long in order to turn out the millions of flat corn cakes so beloved of Mexicans, struck for higher wages. Their demands were soon met—but the specter of a mid-day meal without tortillas was one that made everyone shudder, from beggars to bankers. It would have been much worse than an American meal without potatoes.

Intriguing to the ear of a foreigner are the various whistles which lend significance to the daily street life in the city. Early in the morning the postman announces himself with an imperious blast. The milkman follows somewhat later and he, too, summons the housewife by whistling. The breadman has a shrill tone to his call and the grinder of knives a melodious up-and-down-the-scales movement that seems to charm dulled knives right out of the hands of their owners. The city sleeps to the wail of the lonely night watchman, whose mournful note alone breaks the silence of the streets when all good citizens are abed.

Mexican Moments—Mexicans expect President Roosevelt to beat any Republican sent against him next November . . . Hot dogs are beginning to catch on in this city, three downtown restaurants featuring them . . . Spaniards, who once ruled this country, have descendants here who are numbered among Mexico's thriftiest and most progressive merchants . . . Gen. Santa Anna was President of the republic seven times between 1833 and 1853 . . . Vera Cruz is the oldest city in Mexico, founded by Cortes in 1519 on his way to Montezuma's capital . . . Some critics contend that Gen. Scott's advance on Mexico City in 1847 was a greater feat than Cortes' march in 1519 . . . The two ventures had many similarities, but it is difficult to judge as to which commander faced the worst dangers.

To The Electors

Following are extracts from a letter addressed to the electors of Oxford University by A. P. Herbert, independent National candidate for the seat of burgess of the university in the House of Commons at the time of the last general election.

LADIES and Gentlemen,

I offer myself, with proper humility, for election to the House of Commons as one of the burgesses for Oxford University. Since it is unlikely that we shall meet before the election I think it right to give you some account of myself.

• • • •

Road Safety And Quiet.

I was, I believe, the first writer to call attention, many years ago, to the slaughter on the roads, to demand the restoration of a speed limit and the muting of horns. I conducted a long campaign against excessive speed, recklessness and noise, which made many enemies for me, but had, I think, good results for the community. I was one of the first members of the Pedestrians' Association and the Anti-Noise League. I shall persevere in these beneficient courses, and continually deny the false god Speed.

• • • •

The Empire.

I shall examine with some suspicion any proposals that may be made for the distribution of the British Empire among foreign countries, whatever their birth-rate, insolence or inefficiency. Having some acquaintance with many parts of the Empire, I am persuaded that its inhabitants, accustomed or apprenticed to the practice of democracy, would receive no startling advantage from a transference to the flag of Italy or Germany.

• • • •

Finance, Trade, Etc.

I do not promise to take a prominent part in debates concerning finance, the gold standard, the management of currency, or the working of the exchanges. I have no plan for the restoration of world trade: there will be 613 members of the new Parliament, who have: and I shall support that plan which, after debate, appears to me to be the best.

• • • •

Capitalism And The Socialist.

I am a worker in a precarious trade and know all that can be said against capitalism—the insecurity, the fear of the future, and of old age, the strange inequality of rewards. I have served in the ranks and worked in the East End: I live in a poor part of London, and here, in pubs, in my theatrical work and up and down the London River, have all my life had friendly dealings with working men; and I claim some small knowledge of their lives and needs. But I reject the dogmatic assumptions of Socialism with with which Labor has unnecessarily burdened itself.

They tell us that capitalism is doomed: Karl Marx, I believe, made the same announcement 80 years ago. He may still be right; but the old clock ticks on; and it does not help very much to throw stones at it. It would be surprising indeed if our system had survived quite unshaken the unprecedented upheaval of a World War. But it is infinitely adaptable and has not, I think, exhausted its resources. Capitalism must carry its casualties—it is not doing so badly now and will do better. We should be able to think of unemployment as a triumph of capitalism—the increase of leisure. But that involves more generous unemployment and pension arrangements; and these I should favor, preserving, wherever possible, the principles of contribution and insurance.

Whenever a severe strain comes upon the Socialist Party the fabric totters and the head falls off. This has happened twice within five years. I am afraid that it may happen again. The residue of the party complains that it has been betrayed, and throws the blame upon the leaders, not the party. But when the same misfortune continually occurs to the same motor car, we rightly cease to talk "accidents" and begin to look for some inherent defect. The essential weakness of the Socialist Party is its rigidity, its passion for fixed mathematical formulae—as if human life were a game of chess. When the wind blows it does not "give." When the formula does not fit the facts the leader would like to forget it, but it is too late. His well-trained followers brandish the formula before him and scribble "Traitor" on his back.

I know nothing about agriculture.

War and Peace.

I make no apology for touching this question last, and adhering hopefully to what should be the ideal order of things. I shall support the League of Nations with the same hopes, but upon the same conditions, as Mr. Stanley Baldwin. Having great faith in his honesty and wisdom, I shall follow him in any course that he may pursue. But if collective security should prove in practice to mean collective evasion and British responsibility we must reconsider our commitments.

Quaker City Bustles To Receive Democrats

Philadelphia Sets About With Great Excitement To Lay Plans For Festive Entertainment Of National Convention In June.

By Eugene Pharo.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA has been emotionally all choked up since the wild news reached it that the Democratic National Convention would meet here in June. So much so that even the fiercest innovations of its newly inaugurated new mayor have had only passing attention.

Below all the excitement is an apparent belief that the Democrats, by some of the magic whereby they have been transforming everything else, will manage to bring permanent life and sparkle to this quiescent village.

Civic leaders, irrespective of party, have been putting their heads together to make plans for starting to transform the town somewhat ahead of time. Such a cleaning up, brushing up and reforming as there is to be! And merged with this, such brave new gestures by the mayor.

Most of the latter have had, or have been given, some relation to Philadelphia's putative future as a great convention city. For instance, the mayor has abolished a custom of several years' standing of having automobiles that are illegally parked towed off to police stations in the owners' absence.

At his suggestion, a bill has been introduced in the city council to compel the registration of all residents who, within the past three years, have been convicted of any felony or crime involving moral turpitude, and, within 24 hours of their arrival here, similar listing of all visiting criminals. (A Republican, he has not been explicit about his purpose here in relation to transient offenders, but it is assumed to be the protection of delegates rather than their harassment.)

IN ADDITION to introducing such a continental method of crime prevention, or detection, Mayor Wilson has formed a group of hard-boiled detectives known as the "Big Mob," which is under strict orders to run all visiting racketeers and mobsters out of town, and to slug them down if they so much as venture to talk back. The police force has been ordered to clamp down the lid on gambling and organized vice. "Rackets and gamblers and narcotic rings," it is said, "must be smashed."

At the same time, in direct reference to the convention, the mayor has let it be known that, although the town will not be exactly "wide open" in June, there will be "no unwarranted police interference with visitors."

It's all somewhat confusing.

Confusion, however, is the order of the day, so many and so vast are the plans and ideas that have burst into bloom since January 10. Being fairly confident that the President will appear here to accept the nomination of his party, local enterprisers have set about procuring for the same period a heavyweight bout between Joe Louis and Jimmy Braddock, or, if that cannot be arranged, one between Louis and Max Schmeling. Both the President's appearance and that of Joe Louis are scheduled for Franklin Field, where the greatest crowds can be handled. No one has yet thought of using the same field for having martyred farmers thrown to the Supreme Court Justices, or for burning real estate mortgages at the stake, but those are the only omissions from the neo-classic Roman model for circuses.

PAGEANTRY and panic routes of all sorts will be arranged not only for the time of the convention, but, following the convention, up at least until July 4. Somewhere in that period the Philadelphia Mummers will be given time off from their ashcarts and dump trucks to robe themselves in the fantastic and incredible garb in which for decades they have paraded down Broad Street on New Year's Day. And as a result, it is possible, for the first time in history, some explanation may be gotten as to just why they do it; for it is hoped that some of the more percipient members of the Brain Trust will be here to observe their cavortings.

There is to be a regatta on the Schuylkill, and a golf tournament for a "Convention Cup." The University of Pennsylvania swimming pool, which is near the Convention Hall, will be open to visiting delegates. The State liquor stores have already ordered vast reserve quantities of refreshment. The whole State Highway Patrol is to be ordered into town to make traffic flow most easily.

In connection with the last proposal a one-way traffic loop, involving a number of streets and avenues, is to be laid out from the center of town to the Convention Hall, and on part of it there will be repaving and many repairs, all under the auspices of the WPA. New street signs, some of them illuminated so as to be perceptible through any kind of daze, are to be erected, and heavy trucks are to be routed around the outskirts of the city so that passenger vehicles shall not be held up.

City Hall is to be sandblasted. A cooling system is to be installed in Convention Hall, and the building repainted inside and out. Some of the public buildings are to be cleaned up and modernized so far as possible. The banks of the Schuylkill are to be buttressed with stone ramparts. Even some of the imperfect sewers that for the past year or two have caused limited local floods are to be repaired.

THESE things are, of course, only the beginning. Before June it is possible that the crack in the Liberty Bell will be mended, so that all shall be fresh and new for the apostles of the New Deal. For, upon a visit here on January 12, it was announced by W. Forbes Morgan, secretary of the national committee (evidently persuaded that the Constitution had been completely taken over by the Republicans as their fetish) that the Liberty Bell would be chosen as the symbol of the Democrats.

Standing before than ancient relic in Independence Hall, Mr. Morgan said, according to the next morning's papers, "The Liberty Bell we reverently salute here, the tolling of which has given freedom and happiness to our great Nation, will be the symbol and insignia of the Democratic convention when it meets here June 23."

ALBERT M. GREENFIELD.
His Check Won The Democrats.

That note was the only, or almost the only, remark approaching either idealism or oratory, that has been mingled with the non-partisan and frankly gold-digging verbalizing that has been spread throughout local prints since the momentous decision at Washington. The persistent intention of the Philadelphians, regardless of party, has been as well expressed by the director of the Chamber of Commerce convention bureau as by anyone else.

"We intend to see to it," he said, "that in every way Philadelphia will receive the maximum of business and the maximum of favorable advertising from this convention * * * we intend to make this convention so outstanding that it will be a neverlasting advertisement of Philadelphia as a convention city. It was with this thought in mind that we approached the matter, and we intend to outshine every other political convention in arrangements and in attraction to our visitors."

That, then, is Philadelphia's intention; but it took, a few days ago, a visitors from out of town, to express the reaction of an almost unbiased observers to the frenzied preparations of the city for such an event as it has not had since the Boer War was in progress. He was Col. Edwin A. Halsey, sergeant-at-arms of the Democratic National Committee.

After being taken on a 13-mile tour of the town, and listening to the promises recorded above, he exclaimed, "We're dizzy now. Don't show us anything else. This is another case of 'Alice in Wonderland.' Or better yet, it's like rubbing Aladdin's Lamp."

Having summed up the matter thus, he took a train for Washington—perhaps to see whether some one actually had transferred Aladdin's Lamp from there to Philadelphia.

Among The Magazines

Quoting from two Japanese dailies, the International Gleamings From Japan considers the population of the Nipponese Empire, ranking it fifth in the world. The discussion follows:

"According to the national census taken on October 1 the population of the Japanese Empire is in round numbers 99,500,000. Within the five years since the last census, there was an increase of about 7,660,000, a yearly average of 1,500,000. By next summer, the 100,000,000 mark will be reached. The population of Japan proper is put at 69,250,000.

"With the exception of China and India, which have no census, the Soviet Union has the largest population in the world, with 147,000,000. Next comes the United States, with 123,000,000, followed by Japan.

"As far as population is concerned, Japan is thus among the five big powers."

According to the Chugai, the fact that before long the population of the empire will exceed 100,000,000 creates a serious problem, for a fundamental solution of which the government and the people must unite. People capable of a long-range view will think twice before encouraging artificial control. Checking the tendency for the population to concentrate in the urban districts is as temporizing a measure for solving the problem as is the encouragement of emigration. There is no fundamental solution of the situation except through national expansion, concludes the Chugai.

"According to the Jiji, to find jobs for the increasing population of Japan is a problem not only for Japan but for the whole world. For the support of Japan's big population, there are only two alternatives. One is to "export" Japanese people, and the other is to export goods manufactured by Japanese labor. Japan must adopt one or the other. The world as a whole, therefore, asserts to Tokio daily, must consider this Japanese question."

Supreme Court

Correspondent Submits History Of Judiciary's Function.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: During the past few months there has been a great deal of loose talk about legislation by Congress to curb the United States Supreme Court and make that body subservient to political expediency. The proponents of such ideas would do well to study not only the Constitution but the historical events leading up to the adoption of that historic document. Quite a good many people who are not very familiar with the Constitution appear to have the impression that it is a document which covers the whole category of our Government though that is far distant from the truth.

When the Revolution came, the people of the several States became themselves sovereign, and as such held all of the powers of inherent sovereignty. The United States of America came into existence with the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, but was nothing more than a loose aggregation of States with no surrender of individual sovereignty. Under the Articles of Confederation of 1787, some sovereign rights were surrendered to the general government, but not sufficient to form a stable Nation. The Constitution was formulated to give the general government more powers than were given under the Articles of Confederation. The Constitution, therefore, is nothing more or less than a detailed recital of the various powers the several States were willing to turn over to the general government, and any and all of the powers not surrendered were reserved by the several States.

Before the Constitution was adopted the individual States were sovereign entities with unlimited powers and in forming a general government, the several States did not choose to surrender all, or anything like all of their sovereign rights. Being mindful of the iniquities suffered at the hands of the British government, the people of the several States, in adopting a schedule of powers to be surrendered to the general government through the medium of the Constitution, did not choose to place monarchical powers in the hands of a central government and for that reason established the fundamental basis of the now government on a tripartite plan, under which a congress of the people would formulate laws, a judicial body would determine whether or nor the laws enacted by the Congress kept within the powers not reserved to themselves, and thirdly, an Executive department to carry out the laws as enacted by Congress and found to be judically within the limited powers surrendered by the several States to the general government.

The Supreme Court can not either make laws or enforce them; it can only interpret them. The Congress of the United States is without powers to execute or enforce the laws it passes, that power being vested in the Executive Department which in turn can neither make laws not interpret them. The people of the several States set up this tripartite form of government, and they alone can change it by the method they, themselves, established when the Constitution was adopted. The Congress is a creature of the people, but the people themselves have not given to the Congress the power or right to destroy, curtail, or interfere with the rights and powers of the other fundamental agencies of the tripartite government.

Recently numerous references have been made to the decision handed down by Chief Justice Taney in the Dred Scott case. There is nothing very startling in that decision—for until the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, slaves were nothing more than property and the court could not change the Constitution, which definitely made them chattels.

Another "revolutionary" opinion of the Supreme Court, which has received considerable attention recently is found in the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wheaton 1, wherein the opinion written by Chief Justice John Marshall interpreted the word "commerce" in article 1, section 8, of the Constitution as including "navigation." There is nothing either startling or revolutionary in that. Commerce naturally infers some means of transportation, whether it is by animal transport, steam or electric trains, steamboats, or by airplane.

The people of the several States in surrendering various of their inherent powers of sovereignty to the general government, left ample means of surrendering still further powers should the occasion arise (as it has a number of times) and any attempt the part of one of the elements of our tripartite government to interfere with the constitutional rights of another cannot help but fail to receive judicial approval—in other words if the Congress so far forgets itself as to attempt to "wreck" the Supreme Court, it will be the solemn duty of that court to declare that such action is not the law of the land.

The Bonus.

Chicago Tribune (Republican)—"Congress cannot permanently overlook the fact that the money must be found somewhere. Obviously no such sum can be obtained in a year or two by additional taxation. Equally obviously, the addition of more than $2,250,000,000 to the national debt menaces the Nation's credit. The greater part of the $4,000,000,000 fund remains unspent. With prudent management the balance is sufficient to pay all or nearly all the cost of the bonus. The fact that the payment of the bonus will in itself result in a material reduction in the demands for relief is a further point in favor of using the balance as suggested."

Omaha World-Herald (Independent Democratic)—"In round numbers the value of the bonus certificates due in 1945 is $3,500,000,000. The present value of that sum at 4 per cent is about $2,500,000,000. The difference between those two sums represents the value of the additional gift which Congress is making to veterans. * * * In voting this huge additional gift Congress might at least provide for the means to pay it."

Hartford (Conn.) Courant (Republican)—"The bill may be somewhat modified in the Senate, but no minor alterations can alter the fact that it proposes the payment of a debt that is not due. The fact ought to be sufficient to bring forth a presidential veto, and hope for democracy would rise if enough members of Congress could be persuaded to back the President in it. The Republicans especially, who are preparing to go into a campaign with sound finance as a major issue, should be counted on to oppose the voting of prepayment. Their record in the House, unhappily, is nearly as bad as that of the Democrats."

Norfolk Virginian-Pilot (Independent Democratic)—"The truth, of course, is that payment by bonds or cash is just as wrong in principle in 1936 as it was in 1935 or any prior year; and that cash in any form now would represent a yielding to a group that may be able to enforce upon Congress its claims for special consideration and therefore is the abandonment of 'the principle of government by and for the American people' in favor of 'government by and for political coercion by minorities.' These are the words of the President of the United States. Nobody seriously questions their correctness."

New York Times (Independent Democratic)—"The new soldiers' bonus bill introduced with the support of Senators who usually speak for the Administration, and approved yesterday by the Senate Finance Committee, is a complete surrender to the veterans' lobby. What they seek, and what the Senate committee voted yesterday to grant them, is essentially an entirely new bonus—over and above the settlement made in 1924. * * * So boldly does the plan flout the President's veto of last year that we do not believe he can or will accept it, however readily his spokesmen in the Senate have surrendered."

Baltimore Sun (Independent Democratic)—"Every one of the points raised by Mr. Roosevelt in his veto message of last May can be directed with equal validity against both of the bonus bills. The fact that the Senate bill would make payment in Treasury certificates instead of Treasury notes makes not the slightest difference. * * * Nor do the superficial differences between the two bills, or between either of these bills and that which was vetoed last year, in any sense whatever alter or weaken the moral arguments Mr. Roosevelt brought against the bonus in 1935. It is now reported * * * that Mr. Roosevelt will in all probability accept the Senate bill. Recalling his persuasive and unanswerable argument against the bonus less than eight months ago, it is difficult, almost impossible, to believe that this report can be true."

Excerpts From Our Letters

One Billion Dollars.

Now is the time to prevent war if world war in a year or two is to be prevented. The safest nation in the world is to spend this year a thousand million dollars in so-called defense. Few taxpayers know what one billion dollars means. It means what would equal throwing away a dollar a minute for over 19 centuries. — LUCIA AMES MEAD, Boston, Mass.

Constitutional Tampering.

Men of the mental caliber of Grover Cleveland, or men even possessing a fair degree of old-fashioned common sense would have immediately realized the NRA, AAA, and other alphabetical agencies were unconstitutional, being a direct violation of States' rights, and squelched them in their incipiency. It is regrettable, to speak mildly, that our present rulers refuse to look before they leap, preferring to play with established principles and actually tamper with the Constitution of the United States just to see what will happen. — E. K. G., Washington.

AAA's Attempt.

In 1932 when President Roosevelt took office, and farmers and stock raisers were in an exceedingly bad way. Millions of them were bankrupt and in want. They were forced to sell their produce for less than the cost of production. The AAA was a praiseworthy attempt to improve their lot.—JOHN SONNTAG, Washington.

What Kind of World!

One of your correspondents attempted to show that Jesus was opposed to birth control and cited the quotation "But whose shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, etc.," as proof. Yet, how can we more greatly "offend one of these little ones" than to bring it into the world under circumstances where it cannot have a fair chance? And one of the greatest things women can do to stop war is to say to the war lords and all others who would exploit womanhood for sheer man-power and numbers: "Show us first into what kind of a world you propose that we bring these children!"—MRS. W. C. JOHN, Washington.

Meat Again?

I'm wondering if this AAA decision means that we will be able to buy meat again. I'm glad that we have these Supreme Court justices to protect us from the selfishness and political ambitions of the people who make such wild laws, for there seems to be no one else in power who cares what a hard time we're having. The common people are entirely forgotten these days.—RUTH STONER, Washington.

Before The Next Election.

The die is cast. The question before the public today is "shall we govern ourselves through representation or to be governed by a self-constituted autocrat?" This is a matter of serious import and must be determined by each individual who enjoys the right to vote before the next election.—FRISBEY GILBERT, Washington.

Bonus And Pensions.

Some faint degree of solace might come from hope that the bonus bill would solve forever the question of pensions, so far as the World War is concerned. Vain hope! Already the matter has begun to loom. Inside five or six years, pensions will have become just as much a political question and a factor in elections as they were for more than 40 years preceding the war in Europe.—A. S. CROCKETT, New York City.

Prohibition The Answer?

The only answer to the proposition of the Commissioner to build a "home" for the "cure" of drunkards is to pass the Dyer bill for prohibition of the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia and then enforce it. And then on to national prohibition again—FRANK N. LONG, Washington.

Middle Course.

Apparently a swing too far to the right or left tends to bring about those results that society is forever trying to get away from. Why not try a constructive and sound middle course, taking from the radical and conservative theories the good principles and discarding the impracticable and unworkable ones? Let us shift gradually and cautiously into a category of greater social justice as might be found under a social democracy.—BENJAMIN B. STICKNEY, Jr., Washington.

Negro Health

Reader Urges Proportionate Civic Expenditures for Colored Areas.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The statement by the health officer, Dr. George C. Ruhland, that the mortality among Negroes in the District of Columbia is the highest in the country is startling even if we had become complacent to this known tragic condition. Americans donate millions to the Red Cross to aid the victims of disaster in any part of the world without discrimination as to race or creed. At the same time in their mad rush for wealth and power, in our economic system the dominant race arrogate to themselves all the best opportunities and positions and rise to might and power with their heels on the necks of the minority group. Even in governmental affairs through the use of the photo as a means of identification, the Negro is practically excluded from all except the lowest paid positions along all lines including the artisans.

This results in the Negro being at the bottom of the ladder economically. He does not earn enough money to feed, clothe, and house his family properly. The resultant undernourished physical condition of his family makes them an easy prey to such malignant maladies as tuberculosis. We find the Negro lives in the cheaper and hence less desirable locations and very often unhealthy communities in every city. Public works improvements either stop at their ghetto or are very much curtailed there.

There are six times the number of tennis courts and baseball diamonds for white than that provided for colored. The average white child has three times the recreational facilities provided for the colored child. Hence the colored child has a very inadequate opportunity to engage in outdoor recreation so as to develop a healthy body that will resist disease.

Last year over $2,000,000 was provided for purchase of additional land and development of same for playgrounds, recreational areas, etc., in the District of Columbia, yet in the far northeast beyond the Anacostia River, having an area of 3½ square miles and a population of about 15,000, nothing was allotted. The nearest tennis courts are 4 miles away in Anacostia Park. The nearest public swimming pool is in Banneker Recreational Center, over 6 miles away. This section has no public parks playgrounds, nor recreational center. Burville Public School has less than one-half acre in its playground for 900 children but according to accepted standards should have two and one-half acres. The community center has no gymnasium, as to use the combined assembly hall and gym would ruin the assembly room. The Board of Education and the District of Columbia Commissioners transferred a balance of over $20,000 from the last Burville addition appropriation to complete Morgan School addition, in spite of the insistent demand of the citizens that this money be spent to develop a gymnasium in a large space not otherwise needed in the subbasement.

In the area south of New York avenue and east of North Capitol street is a dense population with several schools having over 2,000 school children and no playgrounds. Here delinquency and tuberculosis is rampant. Last week the heavy rains again caused Watts Run to leave its banks and flood the low lands and cellars leaving to putrefy the sewage washed down from the higher lands in District of Columbia and Maryland. We have been asking in vain for flood relief during the past 15 years. Our Commissioners secured over a millions dollars from the WPA and PWA for storm water sewer to prevent pollution of the waters in our big playground, Rock Creek Park, yet where these poor citizens are trying to buy their homes, they deny us relief.

To combat this tuberculosis in this city in addition to Dr. Ruhland's recommendation we suggest:

1. That colored doctors and nurses be added to the staff of both Gallinger and the Tuerculosis Hospitals.
2. Abolition of all alley dwellings and construction of sufficient new sanitary homes to replace same.
3. Flood relief along the valley of Watts Run.
4. Large and adequate increase in recreational facilities for colored citizens.
5. Substitution of the fingerprint as a means of identification for civil service appointees and the appointment of the eligible at the top of the list which will open to colored citizens adequate employment in the Federal Department, and thereby improve their economic status and their health.

Mussolini's Errors Ruin Italy's "Face"

Il Duce Seriously Threatened By Loss Of Prestige But Concern Of France And Britain For Peace In Europe May Save Him.

By Livingston Hartley.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

THERE are two reasons why a dictator cannot afford to make mistakes. In the first place, he customarily gains his hold over a nation in the name of efficiency and order. His subjects sacrifice their liberty and their right of free speech and public criticism in order to obtain greater efficiency in government than they feel they can achieve through democracy. The mistakes of a dictator strike, therefore, at his very raison d'etre, efficiency.

In the second place, a dictator requires prestige. He cannot afford to admit that he has been wrong, as the British cabinet did when Sir Samuel Hoare resigned. Any failure, any error, damages his prestige. Too many errors may bring his downfall, and with it the collapse of his entire regime. Such a downfall is seldom brought about by votes alone; it is apt to entail revolution.

Mussolini has made, in the last five months, a number of mistakes of the first magnitude, mistakes which have placed Italy "out on a limb," as the Italian people will some day learn. It is of interest to review these errors today, as the League of Nations Council convenes tomorrow to mark a new crisis for Italy and her ruler.

• • • •

THE fundamental error of the Italian dictator was his whole approach to the seizure of Ethiopia. He disdained to follow the time honored precedents of the old imperialism, to move obliquely to his objective by bribing Ethiopian chieftains to revolt against Haile Selassie, and by working towards a revolution in the African kingdom which might yield him an invitation to intervene.

This direct attack united the feudal chieftains of Ethiopia behind their king, where more devious methods might have divided them.

This direct method of undisguised aggression created, moreover, an issue so clear that the members of the League of Nations were forced by public opinion to follow the path of collective action against Italy, however loath certain governments were to adopt such a course. Aggression according to an inflexible program, which demanded war by a certain season, left little room for diplomatic maneuvers. Bound to this program by his own action, Mussolini was outgeneraled at Geneva by the King of Kings during September and his program confronted with obstacles which have since proved insurmountable.

BENITO MUSSOLINI.
The World Has Him In Check.

THIS error in fundamental strategy was followed by a tactical mistake of the utmost consequence. Mussolini not only allowed the controlled Italian press to threaten Great Britain in the most extravagant terms, but announced dramatically that "sanctions mean war." The direct result of these actions was the defensive concentration in the eastern Mediterranean of a British fleet far more powerful than the whole Italian navy.

This concentration removed from the hands of Mussolini a diplomatic weapon of far reaching influence, the threat of superior naval power. If he had succeeded, by diplomacy and soft words, in preventing this British naval move for two more weeks, until he began the advance into Ethiopia, he could have influenced profoundly the action of the British government in support of the League Covenant. Egypt and the Suez Canal would then have been hostages at the mercy of Italian power. Confronted by such a situation, it is doubtful if the British would have dared to undertake the dangerous naval operation of sending part of their battle fleet through the narrow strait between Sicily and Africa. Imperial necessity would subsequently have modified British action at Geneva.

Two more mistakes were caused by errors in judgment.

The Italian dictator underestimated the power of public opinion, which did not exist in his own land in effective form, underrating in particular its political power in the British empire and in many small nations that are now enforcing sanctions.

Mussolini overestimated the power of his military machine in spite of the manifold warnings of foreign experts on Ethiopia and colonial warfare. The much vaunted conquest of Ethiopia has so far proved a fiasco, and much doubt is now expressed whether a quarter of a million Italians will even be capable of holding the positions they already occupy when the serious rains begin. The actual results of over three months operation against ill-armed natives can scarcely be viewed as having enhanced the military prestige of Italy.

EVER since the start of his war Mussolini has continued to make mistakes. It is now reported in dispatches from Rome that the Italian army in Ethiopia was held in check by Il Duce, in order to create better conditions for a settlement like the Hoare-Laval proposals. If these reports are founded on fact, Mussolini's compromise policy would seem to have been unwise. He has not obtained by diplomacy the settlement he wanted and it now appears too late in the season for him to conquer the territorial basis for such a settlement from the Ethiopians.

Mussolini's latest mistake may have the most serious consequences for his country. He failed to accept the Hoare-Laval proposals as a basis for negotiating before these proposals were cast aside in London and Geneva. He lost thereby a golden opportunity to negotiate for peace upon the most advantageous terms, since any new suggestions must prove less favorable to him after the popular storm that the last attempt created. He lost this opportunity as a result of his old failing, the desire for prestige which in known in the Orient as "face."

THE Italian dictator may claim one success in diplomacy to offset some of his failures. This is the postponement of oil sanctions by the members of the League in December, which he brought about by the threat of an Italian attack.

This success, however, may prove in the end to be costly. It has resulted in a solid defensive front against him comprising Great Britain, France, Greece, Turkey and Yugoslavia. If Mussolini should decide to attack any of these powers he would risk not only a disastrous defeat but the loss of some Italian possessions such as the Dodecanese or even some islands in the Adriatic.

The members of the League may now fail to institute oil sanctions against Italy, claiming that such action would be impracticable as long as Italy can obtain her normal amount of oil imports from the United States. In view of the present attitude of Congress towards American trade with belligerents, no American can blame the League members for such a failure, nor has he any right to urge upon them the adoption of measures containing a risk of war. If sanctions are not extended to oil at Geneva, Mussolini can claim that his threatening policy has achieved a further success, although the question of oil is less vital now than it was a month ago.

The mistakes committed by Mussolini in his Ethiopian venture would seem sufficient to cause the eventual overthrow of any government, more especially a dictator who has forced this venture on his country. There is some chance, however, that Mussolini may be saved from the results of his own mistakes by the governments of his foreign enemies. It is known that both the British and French governments now desire to prevent the personal fall of Mussolini, fearing the effect which the succeeding Italian chaos might have on European stability.

Whatever the fate of Mussolini, whether overthrown by his own people or helped to a settlement that will save his face by his foreign enemies, he has caused his country immeasurable damage. This damage is not only financial and economic. A central aim of his Ethiopian policy, Italian prestige, has been shattered by his actions. The prestige of militant fascism has been weakened by the failure of the Italian army in Africa. The national prestige of Italy, which includes its honor and good name, has been largely destroyed by the violation of solemn treaty pledges and by the deliberate bombing of unarmed native populations and Red Cross hospitals. Many years must pass before the prestige of Italy, even in non-sanctionist countries such as the United States, can regain the position it held before Mussolini's war.

What The Wind Brought.

By Emily Franklin.

I counted the treasures, the best of his loots!
The wind had truly made quite a haul,
He swept o'er the country, his seven league boots
Trampled the grasses and weeds growing tall.

And he found in a crevice a late-blooming flower,
He swept gaily through leaves piled high
And he snatched at the fragrance of a quick-tempered shower,
And he sniffed at the smoke of a dark campfire.

Then each thing that he liked he laid in his pack,
Till it bulged with surprises and presents galore,
Then he came before me and removed from his back
All the things he had stolen and went searching for more.

The Out Trail

By Reginald Wright Kauffman.

LATE one afternoon of 1889, or thereabout, a nervous little man, in tweeds and his twenties, entered the dusty editorial rooms of the old Philadelphia Press. Speech and accouterments alike declared him alien: he had a broad "a"; his were the first horn-rimmed spectacles to be seen by Franklin's town—outside its Chinese quarter—since Franklin's death.

The timid visitor offered, for a song, some dozen manuscripts. He was promised a next-morning decision and put in charge of a police reporter, to be shown the city's historic monuments.

But that reporter's ideas of sightseeing were not to the stranger's taste. Besides, the editor wouldn't accept the manuscripts—after being told they had already had obscure publication in India. So Rudyard Kipling received an unpleasant impression of Philadelphia; the reporter received an unpleasant impression of Rudyard Kipling; and—through the decision of Talcott Williams, destined first head of the Pulitzer School of Journalism—the Philadelphia Press lost the American rights to "Soldiers Three."

One morning, some years later, a timid Pennsylvania Dutchman encountered a more timid, but quite querulous, Anglo-Indian—of all places, aboard the "smoker" of a Rutland Railroad accommodation train in Vermont. The Anglo-Indian said he was living near Brattleboro—nor did he love his neighbors. He always made even his smallest purchase by check, but, since his New England arrival, he had never succeeded in squaring his check-stubs with his bank-book: contrary to common experience, the latter volume persistently credited him—Rudyard Kipling—with more cash on deposit than did the former.

"And now," he complained, "I have discovered the abominable reason: these Yankees, instead of cashing my small checks, are selling them above their face-value—to autograph-collectors!"

• • • •

MORE years passed. Edward Bok announced that the Ladies Home Journal was about to pay Kipling—just "Kipling" now—a greater price per word than anybody had ever paid any author at any time. In Mr. Bok's heyday there were many acts forbidden to L. H. J. characters—yet, in one of the manuscripts bought from Kipling, the hero, at some moment of terrible tensity, poured himself a drink of brandy. Mr. Bok—so runs a legend—cabled the author:

"No mention brandy-drinking permitted in Journal. Please wire substitute sentence collect."

And the answer—so also runs the legend—ran:

"Your message is absolutely astounding. If you are serious in your declaration that the mention of brandy-drinking is not allowed in your magazine, you must change the offensive work to 'milk'."

• • • •

IT WAS during a 1911 week-end visit to H. G. Wells that I inquired of my host: "What's happened to Kipling during the last few years?"

"He is suffering from high wages," said H. G. "Before he was attacked by that disease, we would all sit together and Kipling would play with ideas just as the rest of us did. Then came this half-a-crown a word, and he built himself an enormous work-room at the top of his house and never left it without a notebook in his pocket.

"Nowadays, when we sit downstairs, and he attempts to join in the talk, he is immediately arrested by the realization that he has uttered an idea—perhaps as much as a half-sovereign's worth of words about it. So then he makes a note of it—and, somehow, that process dries the river at its source."

• • • •

Add one illustration more: On Thursday last a bright modernist in our own newspaper, wrote regretfully of how our hearts once "sang with the lilt of 'Departmental Ditties'—obviously confusing them with the "Barrack Room Ballads"—of how "sturdy" was Kipling's prose—of how, however, Kipling "came before the discovery of Shaw and Wells."

• • • •

THOSE five incidents mark the five stages in Kipling's career:

The snubbed underling of the Lahore Civil and Military Gazette—the hero of the hero-worshiping adventurous heart of youth, laureate of the young imperialists when his monarch refused to appoint him laureate because he had referred to her as "the Widow at Windsor"—monarch in his own right of the literary market-place—then the shrinkage not so much of his prerogative as of his skill in their exercise—and, at last, a generation which confuses some of his best verse with his earliest immaturities, forgets the essential femininity of his prose, and "dates" him before the 1900 Wells of "Love and Mr. Lewisham," before the "Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant" which made Bernard Shaw a dramatist in '98.

Five stages: Will there be a sixth?

• • • •

CONCERNING Kipling's latest work there seems to be room for little doubt. It was inferior. Already, it has not only been forgotten: it has perished.

Concerning Kipling's poems of empire—all that saga of song from "The Flag of England" in '92 to the proud humility of the "Recessional" wherewith, though it was written for Victoria's second jubilee, he closed "The Five Nations" in 1903—the common criticism is that these are part and parcel of a political creed which is out of Anglo-Saxon fashion. The obvious retort is that, for good or ill, the fashion is bound to return some day—since all political fashions go and come again—that then the enthusiasm for a new chanter of a new imperialism will revive appreciation of such ballads as the one of the Clamperdown, and that, meanwhile, there will attach a high historic value, a warm romantic glow, to the music which moved Americans as well as Englishmen into endeavors desperate and distant, opened new country to old civilizations and gave to ancient lands another life.

YET there is more besides—as different from "Fringes of the Fleet" as "The Song of the Banjo" is different from the imitative "Ballad of the King's Jester."

What are the things in Kipling that moderns really remember? They are Kim and Mulvaney. They are the everlasting boy in "Stalky"—the everlasting battle of man against the ocean in Captains Courageous"—the beasts of a jungle "that never was on sea or land" and that therefore is forever. They are the immortal call to "The Explorer" of "something lost beyond the ranges," the compelling summons of "the outtrail, . . . the Long Trail, the trail that is always new." They are eternal expressions of eternal types and eternal longings—eternal either in the world or in the longing soul of the world.

What America Means

Alexander Meiklejohn Searches For Our Meaning in Some Puzzlement.

By Walker Matheson.

X ALWAYS has stood for the unknown quantity. In this case X equals America and, likewise, America equals X. Briefly, what does either mean? Possibly, it will take a combination philosophical-historical-zoological Einstein to reach the answer. Yet the problem posed in this intriguing 270-page volume is well worth puzzling over. The trouble is, X yields so many answers—and all of them can't be wrong.

Like any intelligent man, Dr. Meiklejohn is alarmed, amazed and confounded by this nation of conglomerates. He must feel something like the cook who discovered that, by putting everything in the kitchen but the stove into a kettle and thereby brewed Irish stew, that here is a mighty mystery—a mystery that the inquisitive have been trying to fathom ever since. For what is America—may we ask the learned professor—but a sort of Irish stew made up of all kinds of peoples from every corner of the world?

Precisely. And it is this, perhaps, that causes Dr. Meiklejohn—Dean of Brown, President of Amherst, founder of Wisconsin's Experimental College and Director of San Francisco's School of Social Studies—to ponder the problem of this nation and to wonder whither we are drifting. For the professor is rather fearful for us. He believes we have lost our original notions of liberty, that the liberal thinking in America is "infected by naturalism, which weakens its influence and belies its real meaning." He is worried by our current forms of materialism. He is mortally paralyzed by the thought that "laissez faire" may ruin Americans as men and as a nation.

It is not strange, at all, that the professor is perturbed. He only looks ahead after seeing our weaknesses at close hand. As a matter of fact, every intelligent person holds some fear for America in his

It is sad, but true, that we Americans worry more about yesterday than we do of today, or shall of tomorrow. We will grant that we do not look ahead and figure the consequences of our quick-let's-do-it-now acts. Americans today are faced with solving problems handed on by our grandfathers and their fathers before them; but yet we are handing on much greater problems to our heirs and theirs.

Possibly what Dr. Meiklejohn is striving for is to find a motive—outside of "Liberty" of which there is little, if any, left now—for the very being of America and Americans. In that case, he probably never will find the answer. America's only excuse for being is that it is America. It is as simple as that.

Japan has her spirit of Bushido, a chivalry that puts personal honor above life, and the nation above personal honor; the Germans have a pride in race and count on "Der Tag"—when she will rule the world; the Italians have pride in that Rome that was, and look to the next glory of the Eternal City; the British have their "King, God bless him!" and muddle through, confident Britannia rules the waves, waives the rules, and who's to tell her no. Probably the Greeks had a word for it, too. But Americans are realists and not idealists. We're too busy snatching "fast ones" off the nearest bar to quicken our wits so we can high pressure the next fellow out of a dollar. And, professor! We're proud of it! And we have a lot of fun.

Taney of the Dred Scott Case

Our First Democratic Chief Justice Appears in Full-Length Study.

By Joseph B. Kingsbury.

Professor of Government, St. John's College, Annapolis.

MARCH 23 will be the 100th anniversary of the appointment of Roger Brooke Taney as Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, to succeed the great John Marshall. Perhaps no great man in our history has had to wait so long to be properly appreciated. This is partly because he succeeded John Marshall, "the hardest task any chief justice ever had to do"; partly because of two episodes, one almost at the beginning of his career, the other almost at the end, which aroused strong feelings throughout the country. The first was his action as Jackson's Secretary of the Treasury in removing Government deposits from the United States Bank; the other was the Dred Scott decision.

It is appropriate that on the 100th anniversary of his appointment there should appear the first complete and scholarly life of this much misunderstood man. Carl Brent Swisher, of Columbia University, has written a life of Taney which should clear up many of the popular misconceptions about the man, and establish him in his rightful place as our first Democratic chief justice. He has carried out worthily the task which the great biographer of John Marshall was urged to do. When Albert J. Beveridge had finished his monumental life of Marshall, Prof. Frankfurter and Mr. Justice Brandeis urged him to undertake a life of Taney, whose regime, as they said, was "practically a dark chapter of American history."

IN the summer of 1835, John Marshall died at the age of 80, and on December 28, Jackson, for the second time, sent to the Senate the name of Taney as Chief Justice. After struggling with the nomination for two months and a half, the Senate finally confirmed him by a vote of 29 to 15, Calhoun, Clay and Webster opposing it to the end.

"The worst was feared when Taney, the archenemy of the bank . . . and critic of the merchant class, with heretical notions as to the interpretation of the Constitution and as to the authority of the court, was chosen as Marshall's successor. Would the court, under his guidance, surrender its guardianship over the rights of property and leave it at the mercy of State Legislatures dominated by the masses of the people?"

The author shows clearly that the Supreme Court entered a new era of constitutional interpretation; but some interesting comparisons and contrasts between Marshall and Taney are overlooked. Taney's real statesmanship might have been more convincingly shown. Great as were John Marshall's services in establishing the national power (or, to be more accurate, in cutting down State powers), there is no doubt that he had gone too far and too fast.

Prof. Corwin says that in none of Marshall's opinions touching questions of national power did he refer to the tenth amendment, which reserves to the States the powers not granted to the United States. While this doctrine of centralized power was useful at the outset to overcome the separist sentiments of the young Nation, it now threatened to provoke a revolution by hampering the States in dealing with their new and varied problems. It is not too much to say that under Taney, the court, by recognizing the right of the States to deal with the new problems of corporations, banks, public improvements, etc., "restored the Federal equilibrium," and so preserved the Union. If so, his statesmanship was at least as great as Marshall's.

TANEY has been called the author of the doctrine of the "police power." Mr. Swisher thinks that "more credit has been given Taney . . . for the development of the concept of the police power than he is entitled to, and more than he would have been willing to accept." It seems to the reviewer that in trying to make a distinction between the "police power" and the "sovereign power of the State," the author is a bit too legalistic for the average reader. It would be hard to find a clearer statement of the police power than Taney's words in the Charles River Bridge opinion: "While the rights of property are sacredly guarded, we must not forget that the community also have rights, and that the happiness and well being of every citizen depends on their faithful preservation." As the author says, "the doctrine was new in the official utterance of the Supreme Court."

The second quarter of the nineteenth century saw the rapid rise of the corporation method of business enterprise. Many of the court's decisions under both Marshall and Taney dealt with the rights of corporations and conflicts between corporate rights and the power of the States to regulate them. Taney was thought to be an enemy of "big business," and the fears of many were realized in the first important decision handed down by the new Chief Justice in 1837. This was the Charles River Bridge case. The question involved was whether the

State of Massachusetts had the right to grant a charter for a free bridge parrallel to an already existing toll bridge whose charter had 30 years to run. Chief Justice Taney, delivering the opinion of the majority, upheld the right of the State to charter the free bridge, and established the doctrine that in the absence of express words granting exclusive privileges in a corporate charter, no such grant can be inferred as against the State. It is significant that the case had been argued before the court while Marshall was still a member, and that, according to Justice Story, Marshall believed the charter of the free bridge to be unconstitutional. This was in harmony with Marshall's Dartmouth College decision, which held that a corporate charter cannot be touched by a State Legislature.

IN OTHER cases Taney interpreted the rights of corporations more strictly, and the powers of the States more broadly, than had John Marshall. But it is not true that Taney had any unreasoning fear or hatred of corporations as such. Some of his opinions recognized the importance and necessity of this new form of business enterprise, and removed obstacles from their way. The Charles River Bridge decision, although considered a blow at corporate monopolies, pointed out that the effect of upholding the bridge monopoly might be that the old turnpike companies might claim that their charters impliedly prohibited the building of competing canals and railroads. Other opinions of Taney's, as for example in the Wheeling Bridge case, and in Railroad Co. vs. Letson, were favorable to the expansion of corporate activity.

A true estimate of Taney's attitude toward the question of State rights and national power would seem to be this: Without sacrificing any of the real gains made by Marshall, he interpreted the Constitution in a manner more in harmony with the spirit of the times. The period from 1830 to 1860 was one of democratic growth and of liberal legislation. Removal of property and religious qualifications for voting, the emancipation of married women, abolition of imprisonment for debt, recognition of labor unions and measures for the control of corporations, appeared in this generation. Many of these were shocking to the conservatives, and many would have been held unconstitutional by Marshall as violations of property rights.

IN some respects, Taney went farther than Marshall in upholding national sovereignty, as in holding that admiralty law extended to all navigable waters; "an advance," said Chief Justice Hughes, "which has been called revolutionary in the conception of Federal power." "The crown of his judicial career," to quote Chief Justice Hughes again, "is found in the opinion in Ableman vs. Booth." Answering the threat of nullification from Wisconsin, Chief Justice Taney, speaking for a unanimous court, asserted without qualification the power of the Federal Government to enforce its laws without State interference.

When we come to the Dred Scott case, we find that three-quarters of a century have not removed the doubts as to Taney's intentions, nor much of the bitterness of the controversy. Dred Scott, a Negro slave, claimed his freedom on the ground that he had been taken by his master into territory which Congress, by the Missouri Compromise of 1820, had declared to be free.

The Supreme Court of Missouri had refused his claim, holding that on his return to a slave State, he reverted to the status of a slave. With the aid of abolitionists, Scott petitioned the Federal Court to reopen the case. The opinion of the Supreme Court, written and delivered by Chief Justice Taney, held that slaves were not and could not become citizens, and therefore could not sue in Federal courts. This much was essential to the decision; but the court went on to express the opinion that the Missouri Compromise had never been constitutional, because it deprived slave owners of their property in violation of the fifth amendment.

THE court, and in particular Taney, was denounced for not confining itself to the question of jurisdiction and for unnecessarily attempting to settle the dangerous question of the power of Congress to deal with slavery. The final judgment of Taney's opinion depends upon one's attitude, not toward the question of slavery or States' rights, but the question of whether or not it is the duty of the Supreme Court to review the constitutionality of acts of Congress.

If one believes that this is the proper function of the court, then Taney's opinion was strictly in accordance with the law of the land. Slaves were property; the fifth amendment forbids Congress to deprive anyone of his property without due process of law; and Congress in legislating for the territories is bound by the Constitution as much as in legislating for the States. If one believes that nullification of Congressional legislation is a usurpation of power by the courts, then the opinion was unnecessary and mischievous.

This was the second time in our history that the Supreme Court had declared an act of Congress unconstitutional. The power had lain dormant since John Marshall first used it in Marbury v. Madison in 1805. Why did Taney, who in 1832 advised Jackson that "the opinion of the judges has not more authority over Congress than the opinion of Congress has over the judges," revive the judicial veto? Mr Swisher explains that at a consultation in February, 1857, the Court determined to ignore the Missouri Compromise entirely and to decide against Dred Scott on the sole ground that under the laws of Missouri, as expounded by its highest court, Scott's return to that State had restored his status of slavery, and therefore he could not bring suit in a Federal court. An incident changed conditions. A few days later it was found that Justices McLean and Curtis had not given up their determination to give extended dissenting opinions in support of the Missouri Compromise. "If the majority ignored that question, and two justices from the North dealt with it boldly and at length, the country would say that the majority had dodged the real issue and decided on a mere technicality." Beveridge, who makes the statement just quoted, declared that in the Dred Scott affair the only villain he found was Mr. Justice McLean, who had Presidential aspirations from the day of his appointment. "McLean stirred up the whole mess."

THE charges that Taney was a tool of the slave interests; that he was a monster who used the judicial power to uphold the institution; that the decision was the result of a conspiracy with the incoming Buchanan administration, may be dismissed as purely partisan. Taney himself loathed slavery. He had long since freed his own slaves and paid them regular wages, and his opinion is full of sympathy for the status to which the law and the Constitution condemned them.

John Marshall and Roger Brooke Taney presided over the Supreme Court from 1801 to 1864. The contrasts between the two men were striking. Taney, born and reared in the cavalier environment, became the complete Democrat, whose great decisions reflect devotion to human rights rather than property rights. John Marshall, one of the "common people," put his faith in the conservative minority, and became the great bulwark of property interests.

Of Taney's character and legal ability, there was general agreement among his colleagues both in the bar and on the bench that he was one of the great lawyers of his time, and that he was a man of peculiar gentleness, firmness, and purity of character. Marshall dominated his colleagues; Taney's consideration, his calmness, courtesy, and almost feminine delicacy, made the consultations of the court unreserved, frank, and pleasing, and the personal relations of the justices cordial and friendly."

Summing up his contribution to our political and legal history, it may be said that Taney "restored the Federal equilibrium" and possibly did as much as Marshall to hold the Union together; that he developed the doctrine of the police power of the States; and that he placed greater value on human rights than on property rights. A recent writer says: "Taney was probably the greatest of chief justices. The equal in general ability of John Marshall, he excelled him as a lawyer and as an enlightened statesman, always barring his one fatal error."

Or one may prefer the judgment of Chief Justice Hughes, speaking at the unveiling of a bust of Taney at Frederick, in 1931: "He was a great chief justice."

Seething Europe

Sir Arthur Willert Fears Worst, Hopes for Best, in "What Next in Europe."

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

IN ALL truth there is no other question which tugs so hard at the hearts of men everywhere than the inquiry on which Sir Arthur Willert, British journalist and diplomat, embarked last summer and which he makes the title of his account of that experience—"What Next in Europe?"

For in large part the key to the European situation is the key to the world situation, and thus to the future prospects of the United States. Should war again break out on that continent, it is doubtful, despite all the ballyho on Capitol Hill about neutrality laws, that this country would not soon be involved in it, as well as Asia.

Consequently the question of whether there will be war in Europe, and when, is of as much importance to us as it is to the Belgians, the French and the Germans. What is Sir Arthur's answer to his question? Like so many others who had sought that answer he cannot be certain as to the exact meaning of his findings, so many imponderables enter into the situation.

But while Sir Arthur does not dogmatically state the answer, he does cite all the factors which ultimately will shape the course Europe follows, and he does it objectively intelligently and entertainingly. The author will be remembered by older residents of Washington as the London Times correspondent here during the World War. His publishers rightly assert that his dispatches from here during that period "rank high in the annals of international journalism." He subsequently became chief of the press division of the British foreign office and in that capacity, he explained and defended the empire's foreign policies to the press of the world, as well as attending as an "insider" virtually all of the international conferences which took place in Europe from 1921 to 1935.

He approached the task primarily as a journalist, made more adept, however, by his knowledge of the inside operation of the diplomatic engine room. His concern was to learn, not what the professional diplomats in foreign offices were saying and thinking, but what the men in the street, in Germany, in Austria, Italy and in England, were thinking.

And if the correctness of such an approach needs justification, it is found in the fact that the results of the British Peace Ballot changed the course of English tactics at Geneva and raised again a hope that collective action for the maintenance of peace is not a pipedream and that British public opinion unseated a British foreign ministers.

Wherever Sir Arthur went in Germany, for instance, he asked those he met what they thought of Adolph Hitler; where Germany was headed; the prospects of war, and the possibilities of internal dissension among the Nazis. Some of these interviews, of course anonymously, are quoted at some length. They give a good insight into the reaction of the average German citizen. Thsi part of the book is fsacinating reading.

But what of the author's conclusions? Well, he found fear of war everywhere he went—a fear and nervousness that distorted and contaminated the processes of normal international intercourse — France afraid of Germany, Germany afraid of Russia, Russia afraid of Japan and Germany, Austria afraid of Germany, Italy afraid Germany may seize Austria—the small countries afraid of their large neighbors, of each other, of the breakdown of the peace treaties.

Is there real danger of another war? Sir Arthur reports that "the state of Europe is obviously not reassuring" but that "on the other hand there are encouraging considerations" and that "with reasonable luck there is no urgent prospect of war."

"The democratic countries," he added, "have still time for a supreme effort to put things right and to devise some means of tolerable community life with their dictatorial neighbors, based upon the development of what is good in the peace settlement and upon the alteration of what is bad in it. Fifteen years after the termination of the last great European conflict, the Napoleonic Wars, there was such a readjustment on a smaller scale, for the alterations required were small; and the outlook today would indeed be grim, were it not permissible—more permissible than it was six months ago—to hope that on this occasion history will repeat itself and that a warless settlement of post-war problems will in the end be reached."

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall.

JAMES RORTY is the latest inquiring reporter to tuck his knees, travel-stained from a wide swing around the country, under a typewriter table—and his report is about as comforting as a nettle mattress. No honest burgher, after reading "Where Life Is Better: An Unsentimental American Journey" (John Day, $3), will be quite the same man.

Our burgher may wind the clock and put the cat out and make all ship-shape under his roof-tree, but at the back of his mind he is going to see a panorama of West Virginia miners, and Ohio onion growers, and Detroit automobile workmen, and Dakota and Imperial Valley farmers. And he will see them neither as pleasant and hearty figures, a pious confidence born of the American dream, nor as digits of statistical meaninglessness. He will see them sharp, whole, and utterly appalling in their lot and status. He will see them—not bohunks or dagoes or spiggoties or square-heads (as if that made any real difference!)—but 100 per cent Americans: and Americans without any hope whatever, for themselves or for their children, of extricating their bodies and souls from a great, all-engulfing morasse. Such, Mr. Rorty finds and reports, is the condition of millions upon millions of that honest burgher's cousins and his cousins' cousins.

It would be quite pardonable if our burgher, after reading this book, were to lie awake for a while staring at his own roof-tree.

"WHERE Life Is Better," you must have observed by now, is a title of pure irony. It was borrowed from an earlier work of Mr. Rorty's, a pamphlet of the same name written in an advertising office under the inspiring aegis of California tourist promotion, in the days before Mr. Rorty turned his back upon all such doings and, in the pages of "Our Master's Voice: Advertising," assailed the craft with conspicuous pungency and venom. Those were the brave old days, and one is inclined to believe that they are really gone.

Let alone that Mr. Rorty, in his 15,000-mile tour, brought the argument down to the State of California itself, and touched off its past (and by no means mythical) glamour with a few hard and bitter facts about the present. That might be allowed to personal disappointment; he had once enjoyed San Francisco very much. But after observing that "California already was building the stockades of fascism with which to protect what was left of its grandiose acquisitive dream," he was moved, and mightily moved, to a piece of symbolism.

"The same old Rotarian rhetoric," he writes, and one can fairly hear his typewriter keys bite into the paper, "the same advertising casuistry, were still current, there as elsewhere, all across the continent. Business would 'pick up.' Life would be better just over some near horizon of space or time—not different, but 'better.' With few exceptions the hitch-hikers I picked up along the road shared this dream equally with the secretaries of the local chambers of commerce."

THERE lies the key of his report. "I encountered nothing in 15,000 miles of travel," Mr. Rorty declares vehemently, "that disgusted and appalled me so much as this American addiction to make-believe. Apparently, not even empty bellies can cure it. Of all the facts I dug up, none seemed so significant or so dangerous as the overwhelming fact of our lazy, irresponsible, adolescent inability to face the truth or tell it.'

"If we as a people," he continues, "are to go down helplessly in a fatuous and seemingly unnecessary chaos, it will be this where-life-is-better dream that ensnared and tripped us. For the masses of the population life is not better here, there, or anywhere across the continent. Nor will it be really better tomorrow, despite the half-baked and contradictory indices of 'recovery' which at this writing have given Mr. Roosevelt his longed-for 'breathing spell.' Within the framework of the present social order there is no escape either in space or time for the great masses of American citizens . . . It is hard for me to understand how any journalist, traveling across the continent with his eye on the facts, could bring back a different report. Yet I know that other reports will be rendered, contradicting mine, and bolstering optimism with evidence of a sort. The dream must be served."

THERE is more here than the clear, engaging eye of veracity—there is continuous evidence of that rarer article, intellectual honesty. It need be no more than parenthetical to say that Mr. Rorty tells us at the outset that his point of view is "frankly radical—curiously enough, the people I talked to did not seem to mind this particularly, not even the chamber of commerce secretaries and business men," and to add his due remark: "Much more than I had expected, I encountered all along the route an impressive residue of the earlier American hardihood which Thomas Jefferson expressed when he said that America would need a revolution at least every 20 years—these people were not afraid to contemplate radical change."

But Mr. Rorty does not belabor us with socialist or communist dogma—he sees, for example, that class warfare is just as reprehensible as any other kind of strife. If the dozens of scenes and conversations he has recorded for us, striking vivid in their pathos or their curious humor, would point straight at a certain unworkability of the present frame-work, then our aforesaid honest burgher must have the intellectual integrity to recognize that fact.

One is not concerned here with possible structural changes—there is a shelf of books elsewhere on the subject, and a regiment or two of embattled theorizers. But it will be enough if so straightforward and vigorous a report on the state of the Union as Mr. Rorty's book will help to show us that a loaf of bread in the hand is a good deal better than a dream in the bush.

On Cats

THOSE people for whom cats are just cats are overlooking opportunities for the observation of animal psychology, not to mention their loss of acquaintance with the most ingratiating of household pets. Anyone who has lived for a time on friendly terms with a cat knows that these proud descendants of an ancient stock are individuals with very definite characteristics, whose esteem and affection are worth winning. And real companionship with a cat, gained only by the exercise of tact, kindliness and sympathy, is an education in the amenities of life.

To adopt a cat into the family is to assume an obligation which is none the less binding because the recipient of the care happens to belong to what we call a lower order of intelligence. The cat is a sensitive being, full aware of the attitude of human associates, and responsive to courteous consideration as well as to affectionate solicitude. Prospective "owners" of cats can prepare themselves for their responsibilities in no better way than by reading what Eleanor Booth Simmons has to say about everything from proper diet to emergency operations.

LIFE AND LETTERS
Neutrality: 1914-1915
inside story, in the definitive biography of Woodrow Wilson, of the period in which Wilson failed to realize his hopes for America's neutrality in the World War.
As John Chamberlain says in the N.Y. Times, this is "not only definitive history; it is also a parable with immediate contemporary application."
President Roosevelt has written to the author: "I shall read every line of it with interest because, as you aptly observe, the problems of American neutrality which confronted Woodrow Wilson... are very much like the problems which face the Administration today."

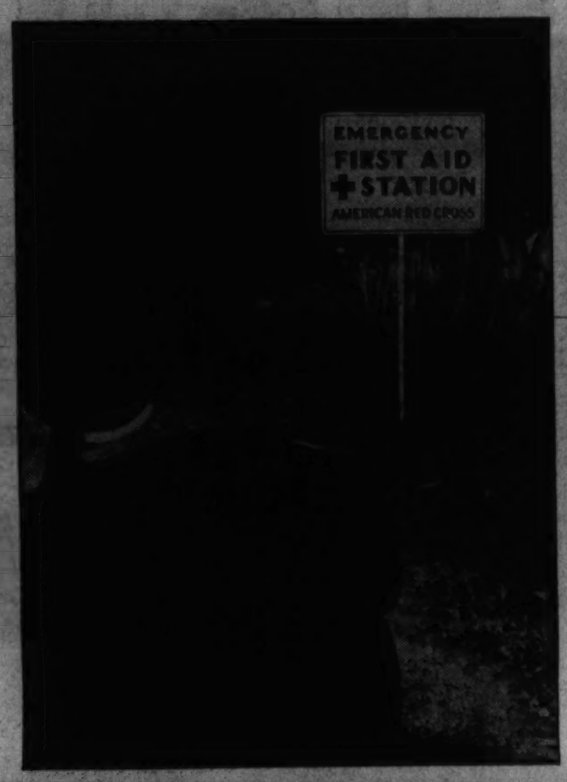
Red Cross Launches a Vast Offensive Against Accidental Death



The Red Cross has been man's most constant friend. Above, Red Cross workers are caring for the injured after a great catastrophe. Center, a first-aid sign goes up after an accident.

Above is a scene after an earthquake disaster, showing the tent city that gives shelter. Below, a great Red Cross camp feeds refugees of a major tragedy.

Carelessness Claims Thousands of Victims

Major Calamities and Famine Less Formidable in This Country Than the Multitude of Minor Fatalities Everywhere.

By William Ray.

From Maine to California more than 2,400 committees are preparing for battle against the monster of preventable accidents that has been stalking the homes, farms and highways of America, bringing death to more than 100,000 persons annually and injury to more than 9,800,000 others.

This is only the beginning. Before the battle is finished it is expected that at least 3,700 groups under one banner will be in the field, covering every home, every farm, every highway from one end of the United States to the other.

The flag under which the offensive is being conducted is that of the Red Cross—international symbol of mercy and help for those in distress. The commander in this huge drive against the stalking foe is Admiral Cary T. Grayson, who within a few weeks will be able to look back over his first year as chairman of the American National Red Cross. And in reviewing the work that has been accomplished during the comparatively short time he has been in office, it is noteworthy that the year was perhaps the busiest, from the standpoint of work accomplished and relief administered, in the peacetime history of the organization which he heads.

Vast Program Organized.

But these committees, these fighters, have quickly caught the spirit of enthusiasm for the defeat of the enemy in the program which Admiral Grayson brought into the organization early in 1935, and have accepted responsibility as representatives of the more than 4,000,000 members of the organization who are backing the battle with their financial and moral aid.

As a physician of national reputation, Chairman Grayson brought with him into the Red Cross an interest in the health and safety of the Nation's people that is undoubtedly proving useful—and most probably was an instigation—in the drives for safety and better health conditions which have been inaugurated by the Red Cross under his administration. He has imparted his belief to these local committees all over the United States that the Red Cross, through its more than 12,000 chapters and branches, is faced with the obvious duty of curbing preventable deaths from accidents and carelessness.

Although the Red Cross was born on the field of battle, it has grown to be the world's greatest peace-time relief agency, with societies active in 63 nations. These groups are organized in a League of Red Cross Societies of which Admiral Grayson is chairman. These national societies have come, in most countries and particularly in the United States, to stand as an everpresent friend to those in need as a result of natural catastrophies, shipwreck, and pestilence. And as Admiral Grayson reviews the work of the organization during his first year as its head, he may well be proud of the work accomplished, for it was a record-breaking year that piled up the greatest list of relief operations in the history of the society.

Heavy Toll of Disasters.

The list, to illustrate a few of the most outstanding jobs done during the year, deals in large numbers:

More than 611,000 victims of 160 different disasters were aided during this time. This was the largest number of calls for help in disasters during any 12-month period in the organization's history.

Of these disasters 128 occurred in 37 States and the Territory of Alaska, establishing a new record for frequency, which is 50 per cent higher than the average for the past ten years. During the last week in June the Red Cross was giving assistance simultaneously on the scene of 38 disasters, scattered throughout 15 States.

Variety of type as well as the increased numbers of disasters made the year's disaster work outstanding. A devastating fire in Nome, Alaska, the tragedy of the Morro Castle off the New Jersey coast, the trench mouth epidemic in Colorado, the Midwest dust storms with the attendant increase in respiratory diseases, floods occurring in areas where drought had been common for years and recurrent floods and tornadoes in the several areas all called for a more than usual measure of service by the Red Cross.

"The abnormal demands made upon the Red Cross in the past year for emergency help and rehabilitation work on the scenes of disasters cannot fail to impress anyone with the necessity of keeping this organization in a strong and vigorous condition," said Chairman Grayson recently.

Classified according to the nature of the disaster, tornadoes lead the list with 50, followed by 35 fires, 29 floods, 9 hailstorms, 7 windstorms, 6 typhoons, 5 epidemics, 3 mine explosions, 2 shipwrecks, 2 school bus accidents and 2 storms. Other types of disasters occurring not more than once in the year covered by the recent annual report included a brush fire, cloudburst, cyclone, dust storm, earthquake, explosion, forest fire, hurricane, mine fire and sewer cave-in. Since then many other disasters have called workers out, including still more floods, hurricanes, epidemics and industrial accidents.

Emergency Relief Quickly Mobilized.

Immediate emergency relief as well as rehabilitation assistance by the Red Cross in these many disasters was made possible through the Nation-wide organization of its 3,700 chapters, which provides for meeting emergency needs of disaster victims in practically every county of the United States and every part of its insular possessions; furnishing trained local leadership and making available the services of the personnel and resources of the national organization. In every disaster calling for Red Cross assistance in the past year its representatives and volunteers have received the cooperation from State, National and local organizations.

Governmetn co-operation with the Red Cross on disaster scenes has been especially valuable through the Federal Emergency Relief, U. S. Army Engineers, U. S. Coast Guard and the U. S. Weather Bureau FERA and other Government relief administrations on disaster scenes have continued aiding those families who were on their roles prior to the disaster, leaving to the Red Cross the responsibility of meeting emergency needs for families made destitute as the result of disaster.

Personnel, boats and other facilities of the Army engineers have been placed at the disposal of the Red Cross in many disaster relief operations and have been of immeasurable value, particularly during floods. Similar co-operation has been given by the Coast Guard, which has assigned its men and facilities for rescue work in times of emergency. Furnishing flood, hurricane and other forecast information is a Weather Bureau service of long standing which is invaluable to the Red Cross in formulating plans for evacuation of threatened areas and organizing its disaster relief forces at strategic points.

Mohe than $630,000 was spent by the Red Cross in its disaster relief operations last year. Of this amount only $126,000 was contributed in connection with individual disasters, the remaining $500,000 being expended from general Red Cross funds. Voluntary disaster contributions made up a smaller part of these emergency expenditures this year than in any of the preceeding ten years, due to the heavy demands of unemployment relief and the recurrence of disasters in certain areas.

The Red Cross is engaged in public health work through its public health nursing services which were maintained by 550 chapters in communities scattered throughout the United States, with 765 nurses being employed by them in this work. Close co-operation was given local and State public health agencies in various sections of the country, in many cases assisting local agencies in health projects where public funds were not available.

A total of 214,444 cases were cared for by Red Cross public health nurses during the year, 1,156,003 visits being necessary in giving this care. Through the same period 633,944 school or pre-school children were inspected by the nurses. Of these, 325,329 were found to be suffering from one or more physical defects, while 195,137 of these children were treated by the Red Cross or co-operating physicians.

An increasing number of mothers and young women are taking courses in home hygiene and care of the sick, which is a standardized subject in chapters in all sections of the country. During the past year, 52,196 persons have completed this course and received their certificates or cards, with 1,583 instructors caring for the classes.

In the field of prevention the Red Cross has had an unusually busy year. More than 54,700 children were immunized, most of them of pre-school age, in an effort to combate the dangers of diphtheria, this work being a major project in many Red Cross chapters.

In combatting pellagra, 388 chapters in the Eastern section of the country and 72 chapters in the Midwest are carrying on pellagra control work and distributing yeast. Between 25,000 and 30,000 persons have received treatment during the past year.

As a means of eradicating malnutrition, especially among children, 270 home economists assisted chapters in educational efforts to raise the nutrition level of families in many sections of the country. In 52 chapters, 155 of these home economists served as instructors in Red Cross food and nutrition courses. In addition, 4,141 Red Cross certificates or cards were issued to students completing work in these courses.

The inauguration of the most wide-sweeping campaign for the prevention of accidental deaths and injuries yet carried out in the United States took place during the past fiscal year.

"The American Red Cross is putting all the resources behind the organization into this fight against death from accidental causes on the highways, in the home, on the farm and in the water," James L. Fieser, vice chairman in charge of domestic operations, said recently in commenting on the past year's work. Mr. Fieser is the chief directing domestic relief and all field work.

"The idea of providing first aid stations along the Nation's arterial highways has been taken up eagerly in all States," Mr. Fieser said. "Red Cross chapters in practically every community throughout the country are making plans to establish and maintain these stations for the assistance of the injured along arterial highways at every point where they are practical and where a need for preparedness in case of smash-ups exists.

This week 259 first aid stations were already functioning at strategic points on America's highways, with sites selected and personnel in the process of training for 1,517 others. In the East 181 stations have been established, and 1,109 stations have been projected for Alabama, Maryland, Mississippi, Kentucky, Tennessee, and other states in the northeast or south. Sixty-four stations are servicing the highways of the far west, and 236 other stations will soon be opened.

Organizing National First Aid.

"Even with all these stations planned or in operation," Mr. Fieser said recently, "we have barely scratched the possibilities of locations for others along our main highways. National first aid field representatives have been in the field, but a few months explaining how to organize and maintain the stations to chapters. Today's results are only a beginning, but serve to indicate what can be accomplished, when all of the states have been covered and chapters everywhere co-operate to help victims of motor accidents."

But it is not only along the highways, the Red Cross realizes, that the need for battle against accidents is found. More than 34,500 persons were killed in their homes during the past year—just 1,500 less than on the highways, and the Red Cross is emphasizing this fact through the chapters in an effort to make persons more accident-conscious in their homes. Children in schools throughout the country, the report reveals, are being asked to assist in the elimination of accident hazards from the home and the farm.

"The year 1934 passed all others in the number of deaths in our country from accidental causes," Harold F. Enlows, director of Red Cross First Aid and Life Saving Service, points out. "From all causes more than 100,000 lives were sacrificed to the hazards of our present times. In addition, 9,821,000 were injured, who did not die, but of these a great many were permanently crippled.

"The tremendous economic waste amounted to more than $3,500,000,000 during the year," Mr. Enlows said.

The first aid service of the Red Cross trained 187,255 persons in the application of first aid during the year, this being a gain of more than 56,000 certificates issued over the previous year. About two-thirds of those receiving certificates were in community groups under the direction of local chapters. Of the total, 64,253 persons completing the course were enrollees in the C.C.C. groups, where the Red Cross carried on complete courses of instruction in hundreds of camps throughout the country.

The fight for safety was waged just as vigorously on water as on land during the year. Actually 74,274 persons qualified as Red Cross life savers, 42,010 of these being juniors and 32,264 seniors. The total showed a gain over the previous year of 1,771 persons qualified to carry out rescues on the sea, inland lakes, streams and pools.

Assistance brought to both civilian and service men's families during the past year revealed an amazing amount of voluntary work on the part of members of the American Red Cross. The year's report revealed that 135,026 volunteers in chapters of the Red Cross throughout the country gave 2,823,346 hours of work to families or individuals needing assistance.

Juniors Serve Volunteer Task.

A vast number of volunteer tasks were also carried out by members of the Junior Red Cross. Some of the projects undertaken by the younger section of the Red Cross included the printing and distribution of stories in braille, the furnishing of libraries for children in poorly equipped schools in remote sections of the country, distribution of toys to children who were victims of disasters, provision of Christmas menus and greeting cards for veterans in hospitals and many other forms of service.

Red Cross volunteer services are called on for a great variety of tasks. Many developments in chapter activities have been due to National State, or local changes in the Emergency or unemployment relief work. In a number of localities county or city officials have asked Red Cross chapters to aid in the administration of local relief funds. In such instances the chapters have placed their experience in relief administration at the disposal of government officials and co-operated wherever possible.

In hundreds of Red Cross chapters much progress has been noted during the past year in development of projects designed for community betterment. Community problems in which they have engaged include school lunches for underprivileged children; assistance to transients in the communities; providing milk to mothers and children; assistance in the canning of foods; distributions of surplus farm products; purchase, collection, renovation, repair and distribution of clothing; medical and hospital aid; corrective work involving purchase of glasses, orthopedic appliances, etc.; layettes; corrective diet teaching, community garden projects, and many other forms of assistance.

War Veterans Receive Help.

Members of the war service staff of the Red Cross handled 286,984 individual cases for service or former service men during the past year. This involved research in connection with claims, assistance to families of service men, hospital assistance and arrangements, payment of claims, and other services the men for many reasons find it impossible to handle themselves.

Volunteers during this period produced 1,672,404 garments for distribution; 4,123,399 surgical dressings; 14,491 Christmas bags for distribution; completed 320,406 pages of braille for those who have lost their sight, and canned 27,294 pints of vegetables or fruit for the needy. This work was done by 135,026 volunteers donating 2,523,327 hours of their time to chapter work.

The fight goes on. Under Chariman Grayson's leadership, workers in all walks of life have enthusiastically fallen into the line of battle and Red Cross officials, both in the local chapters and at headquarters in Washington, look forward to the next year confident that the number of deaths and accidents will be greatly reduced, and that the efficiency and expediency of the many services of the Red Cross will continue to increase in usefulness to the people of the country as a whole.

Nations Move Away From Ideas of Stabilized Currencies

Return to Gold Standard More Remote Than Last Year.

By A. P. Youngman.

Although the desirability of a return to fixed exchange parities is becoming increasingly apparent, the prospect of currency stabilization by international agreement seems to be no nearer, if not more distant, than a year ago. The dollar-sterling rate remained relatively steady during 1935, but the gold bloc currencies were under pressure at various times for various reasons throughout the year. In the spring Belgium was forced to devalue her currency while France, Holland and Switzerland suffered heavy losses of gold due to fear of devaluation and later to the political tension created by the Italian quarrel with the League. The year-end flight from the franc, precipitated by internal political disturbances and international complications, resulted in further huge gains of gold by the United States which aggravated the mal-distribution of the yellow metal and gave opponents of exchange stabilization by international agreement another argument against early action.

Gold Parities Badly Shaken.

While the gold bloc countries still hold abundant gold reserves, confidence in their ultimate ability to maintain the present gold parities of their currencies has been severely shaken. Since the year-end, moreover, there has been increased nervousness regarding the future of the dollar, especially in Europe where our spending programs has from the beginning aroused grave misgivings.

However, during the past year when there was no fear of immediate further dollar devaluation, fear of war in Europe and hope of speculative profits attracted foreign capital to this country. Now that the agricultural program of the Administration is jeopardized by Supreme Court decisions and inflation threatened by fresh outlays to provide bonuses for veterans, rumors of further devaluation of the dollar have again been heard and the possibility of a return flow of capital to Europe has to be considered.

It seems fair to conclude, therefore, in the light of recent happenings that the objections raised upon previous occasions to efforts to stabilize the world's leading currencies apply with especial force at the present time, while the arguments advanced in favor of immediate action do not seem as persuasive as formerly.

Experts Differ About Remedy.

Nevertheless, monetary experts and financiers differ widely as to the policy that should be followed, as shown in a series of highly informative and thoughtful articles published during the past year in the monthly Review of Lloyd's Bank. The articles, reprinted in a separate pamphlet, "Currency Stabilization and the Pound Sterling" as a supplement to the December issue of the Review discuss the problem primarily from the British point of view, although Dr. B. M. Anderson of the Chase National Bank and Prof. Charles Rist of France contribute to the symposium. Both these experts are advocates of immediate stabilization. Dr. Anderson's exposition of the evils that result from the fluctuation of currencies, and his account of the important role played by gold as an instrument for the regulation of international balances of payments are forceful. So is his emphasis upon the salutary discipline of higher discount rates in a world ravaged by war and poor in capital.

Prof. Rist notes that the existence of a huge mass of floating capital is a consequence, not a cause, of currency instability. It is impossible, he believes, to reach a so-called normal level for fluctuating currencies because, he says, the "mere existence of a paper currency modifies the real trade balance such as would obtain if the country concerned were on the gold standard." Stabilization would, he thinks, facilitate greater freedom of trade since the systems of quotas, international clearings, and other impediments to exchange of goods have followed devaluation instead of causing it.

It follows from his exposition that the only way to secure stabilization is to act speedily instead of waiting for adjustments, which are believed to be impossible under existing conditions.

Both Prof. Rist and Dr. Anderson are inclined to take an ultrasimplified view of a problem that is confused by many factors which they fail to take into account. Other advocates of a return to stable currencies anchored to gold, such as Prof. Lionel Robbins, of the University of London, and the anonymous writer of a dialogue, "Between a Foreign Statesman and an English Student of Affairs," are disposed to make a more cautious approach to stabilization. The practical question, says Prof. Robbins, is not whether to go back to gold—about the desirability of a return he has no doubt—but whether to go sooner or later and on what terms. After emphasizing the fact that British recovery is largely domestic, with little gain in exports following depreciation of the pound, the writer stresses the importance of creating an atmosphere of confidence in which international capital movements will take place for profit instead of for safety.

Stabilization is also urged as a means of eliminating the dangers associated with a regime of cheap money. Prof. Robbins is, moreover, fearful that the present uncertainty will lead to a break-up of the gold bloc, followed by a regime of competitive devaluation. Therefore, he is disposed to advocate a tentative pegging of the pound in agreement with the French and British authorities to see whether it can stand the strain.

Among the uncompromising opponents of a return to gold is H. D. Henderson, who disagrees with Prof. Robbin's view that domestic recovery has about reached its zenith and that stabilization is necessary to revive foreign trade. He doubts whether exports would be encouraged to any extent by stabilizing the pound. He applauds instead of deploring the stimulative effect of cheap and abundant money. He is thoroughly skeptical of the possibility of removing trade obstacles, and while he would not oppose a tentative pegging of exchange rates, he thinks it would not be practicable until the gold bloc countries are prepared to abandon their present parities. Even then the maintenance of a stable exchange would be undertaken with the proviso that it would not require a rise in bank rate whenever the sterling exchanges were weak.

Robert M. Shone directs his attack particularly against the advocates of stabilization who urge the merits of the gold standard as a regulator of trade balances. He asserts that the orthodox theory of the way in which such adjustments occur is utterly unreal, because it fails to allow for the inflexibility of industrial prices in the face of pressure much greater than any that a central bank can apply. Wages, he says, have gradually congealed, having fallen only 5 per cent in Great Britain between 1929 and the lowest point of the depression. The decline in prices of manufactured goods likewise has been slight. Consequently, Mr. Shone argues that since it is impossible to have both rigid prices and rigid exchanges, the only alternative is a free exchange system, so controlled that changes in the parity are made only when an unstable balance of international payments is developing.

Keynes Allied With Opponents.

J. M. Keynes also belongs to the group hostile to proposals looking toward even tentative stabilization at the present time. Before stabilization de facto is attempted, he says that the exchanges must be in reasonable equilibrium—that is the rates must be such as can be maintained without undue strain on either side, and without large gold movements. A preliminary period of experimentation, however, cannot begin until the gold bloc countries have devalued or effected other adjustments to remedy the overvaluation of their currencies. Thereafter, Mr. Keynes proposes to try to maintain a de facto stabilization within a narrow range, allowing for a moderately wide gap between gold points, he advocates dealings by central banks in forward as well as spot exchange with a view to making an effective bank rate for foreign transactions different from that for domestic operations. But while committed to advocacy of short term stability within a limited range, Mr. Keynes insists that Great Britain must retain the discretion to do whatever is required to relieve a sudden and severe or a gradual or continuing strain. In other words, he would not be willing to take action that involved placing restrictions upon credit believed to be inimical to domestic recovery and conducive to increased unemployment.

The Hon. R. H. Brand, international banker and financial expert, concludes the series of articles with a statement that reveals a balanced judgment characteristic of the man of affairs whose practical experience causes him to modify the dogmatic rigors of the theorist and to temper the uncompromising conclusions reached by the student, without denying the theoretical validity of his abstractions. Mr. Brand, for instance, fully realizes the value of stable currencies. But he is not for that reason inclined to underrate the difficulties in the way of achieving stability. To his mind "the question is not whether stability of currencies inter se is in itself desirable, but whether a plan of stabilization now is desirable and maintainable in the world as it is."

After reciting the progress made by reduction of international indebtedness, correction of the maladjustment between agricultural and industrial prices, and increases in gold production, he points out that, notwithstanding these improvements, many debtor countries are still unable to discharge their obligations or to dispense with rigid exchange regulations. Where that is true the basis for real currency stability is, as he says, still absent. Furthermore, the political unrest in Europe and the growth of government intervention make it increasingly difficult to dispense with the tariffs, quotas, and "all the other paraphernalia of economic nationalism and planning."

Significant and merited emphasis is also placed upon the under-valuation of the dollar and the uncertainty as to the future of the credit structure and price level in this country. These and other reasons are given for delaying a return to the gold standard. Whenever the pound is stabilized, however, Mr. Brand favors definitive stabilization, as opposed to the tentative arrangements advocated by some of the experts. Up to a certain point he agrees with Mr. Keynes that the exchanges must "shake down" to levels that can be maintained without excessive strain. But he is thoroughly skeptical of the efficacy of the ingenious "gadgets" which Mr. Keynes proposes to employ. Furthermore, he is not in sympathy with the view that a hard and fast line can or should be drawn between internal and external business. Nor does he attribute to the bank rate the magical powers for destroying or sustaining domestic prosperity which are claimed for it by Mr. Keynes and his followers.

In conclusion Mr. Brand calls attention to the most vulnerable weakness in the elaborate defenses erected by advocates of currency management, as opposed to fixed exchange parities based upon gold. Even if one is not disposed to challenge the theoretical validity of the arguments advanced by men who exaggerate the importance of low interest rates and they are open to attack as short-sighted and dangerous methods of trying to stimulate industry—it is reasonable to doubt the ability of those in authority to manage their currencies "by the pure light of reason" and intelligence."

Brand States Value of Gold.

Nobody ever maintained that the gold standard was perfect, but, as Mr. Brand well says it has "one great merit, that politicians can do nothing with it; that it is something to which they must conform." Unfortunately, the merits of the automatic gold standard cannot be enjoyed in a world that is unable or unwilling to accept the conditions essential to its successful functioning. Therefore, Mr. Brand concludes on a note of uncertainty. The decision, he implies, is in the lap of the gods. Whatever our convictions as to the superiority of the gold standard, time alone can decide whether it can be effectively restored.

The best proof of the soundness of a policy of "watchful waiting" is provided by this collection of brilliant essays by foremost monetary and financial authorities, presenting divergent interpretations of the effect of currency depreciation and counseling opposed policies that cannot be reconciled by any stretch of imagination or exercise of dialectical skill.

Reception at Shoreham Hotel Follows Ceremony.

Bridegroom Is Son of Mr. and Mrs. Venard Anderson, of Baltimore.

Announcement is made of the marriage last evening of Miss Louise Madaline Turner, daughter of Mrs. Corinne Wood Turner, and Mr. Richard Lynn Anderson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Venard Elmore Anderson, of Baltimore, which took place in St. Alban's Church with the Rev. Charles Warner officiating. Baskets of euphobia and pink and blue snapdragons, tied with white ribbons, marked the pews.

The bride, who was given in marriage by Mr. Ralph Richards, wore a medieval gown of cream moire. Rare old lace, a family heirloom, formed a Medici collar on the square neckline of the frock which had long full sleeves and a bouffant skirt with deep box pleating forming the train. Her veil was of antique ivory net, held in place by a Juliet cape of the same lace and sprinkled at intervals with clusters of orange blossoms. She carried a white prayer book which was marked with lilies of the valley and streamers of white ribbon.

Attending the bride were Mrs. Thomas Franklin Cooper and Miss Helen Hendricks, who were frocked alike in models of orchid crepe fashioned with small capes forming a deep V at the back.

The skirts and edges of the capes were edged with pleating and they wore coronets of pearls and carried bouquets of orchid and pink sweetpeas. Mme. Fotitch (above), wife of the Minister of Yugoslavia, and Mme. Wadsted (right), wife of the Minister of Denmark, are among the group of prominent members of diplomatic and resident society who are serving as patronesses for the Bal Boheme, to be held at the Willard Hotel tomorrow evening.

Many women prominent in diplomatic, official and residential society are patronesses and boxholders for the brilliant Arts Club Ball, the Bal Boheme, to be held tomorrow evening at the Willard Hotel.

Bal Boheme to Glitter Through Superstitions Theme

Dinner, Cocktail Parties Will Precede the Ball and Pageant.

An outstanding social event tomorrow will be the Bal Boheme at the Willard Hotel at 10 o'clock. This brilliant ball of the arts in the past 12 years has become one of the high points of the midwinter social season, in the minds of men and women of prominence. Many visitors come to Washington for this event nowadays, just as for years they have gone to New York for the famous Beaux Arts Ball.

The bal tomorrow night will be preceded by many dinner and cocktail parties, and between 10 and 11 o'clock the hostessess of Washington, with their guests, will arrive at the Willard for the gala Arts Club event.

Upstairs in the ballrooms the party will have gotten under way at 10 o'clock, when the general dancing begins, and the younger set is interested in the fact that, notwithstanding the spectacular entrance of the famous floor committee of 33, the arrival of the official hosts of the bal, who are the officers and chairmen of the Arts Club, the presentation of the colorful pageant, "The Lost Opal," between half-past 11 and midnight, dancing will continue throughout the entire evening in the small ballroom with one of Washington's most popular orchestras playing.

Amid the brilliant illumniation of the grand ballroom, with its colorful decoration from end to end, the pageantry of Washington society will be seen, as they make their way to the boxes lining the entire two sides of the room. Above the heads of the hostesses and their box guests will be decorations according to the "superstitious" theme of the Bal this year; at either end of the big room will be huge murals, depicting 13 well known superstitions. It is expected that the hostesses and guests at this ball will costume according to the imagery of divers folk lores. The famous trio of judges acting under the guidance of Mr. Clifford K. Berryman will be asked to decide which fair lady wears the most beautiful costume according to the theme of superstition; and the second award shall be to the most original creation suited to the theme of superstition; and the wearer of most amusing conception of a superstition shall be given third place in the estimation of the distinguished gentlemen who have accepted the task of judging those thousands of costumes.

The list of patronesses for this year's Bal Boheme, headed by Mrs. Roosevelt, is almost a register of diplomatic society. There will be the Senora de Espil, Mme. Troyanovsky, Mme. Ertegun, Senora de Castilla Najera, Mme. Peter, Mme. Prochnik, Mme. Bostrom, Mrs. Michael MacWhite, Senora de Arcaya, Mme. Wadsted, Senora de Alfaro, wife of the Minister of Panama, Senora de Alfaro, wife of the Minister of Ecuador, Mme. de Morgenstierne, Senora de Castro, Mme. Jarnefelt, Mme. Petroff Tchomakoff, Mme. Bulow, Mrs. Marcus A. Coolidge, Mrs. Henry Wilder Keyes, Mrs. Charles L. McNary, and Mrs. Pittman.

The complete list of sponsors and patronesses is a lengthy one, and includes names of prominent women and wives of prominent husbands in the Capital. This list comprises Senora de Bayle, Mme. Sokolowska, Mme. Skvirsky, Senora de Yrujo, Baroness Beck-Friis, Baroness van Breugel-Douglas, Mrs. F. C. Bradley, Senora de Munilla, Marchesa Cugia di Sant' Orsola, Mme. Americans on the Continent

By Andre Vulliet.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

We are starting our column with Richard Heslin because all other Americans on the continent have been eclipsed by this 15-year-old luminary. "The most representative boy," of the Madison Square Boys Club, as we told you last week, is being feted by the French Line and "Figaro"—and "doing" Paris in grand style. This last week reporters have recorded his every move and evening editions invariably come out with thick, black headings: "Today, Richard Heslin visited . . ."

Among his many social calls, "Red" took time off to pay a visit to the enigmatic Mona Lisa in the Louvre Museum. After smiling back at her for some minutes, he said: "Gee! she certainly keeps looking at you all the time." "Red" concluded that she was "swell," and that "they sort of got along together." While on the subject of women, we found out that the envoy throught French girls as nice as Americans, adding "if not even better."

Richard visited the tombs of the French kings as St. Denis, was received by Cardinal Verdier, who gave him a medal of Notre-Dame for a keepsake, called on Mme. Foch, and deposited a wreath on the tomb of the Unknown Soldier. He also had a wee taste of Paris night life in a Montparnasse cabaret.

"Red" will be sailing back home shortly with a lot of souvenirs and a brand new trunk given him by the manager of a Paris department store to carry them in.

Old weather man is deluging Parisians and piling up yards of snow for winter-sports-inclined Americans. Those usually found at other seasons of the year at Le Touquet, Monte Carlo or London, are bound for or have arrived at St. Moritz and other resorts.

Henry Hays Morgan, brother of Lady Furness and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt, who presides over the destiny of the St. Moritz Tobogganing Club, has been watching an Italian pick and shovel battalion finish the Cresta Run. A time and labor saving device called a "ski-lift" was built by one Col. Hans Bonn, and inaugurated by no other than Douglas Fairbanks. It leads from Suvrette up the mountain to a height of 800 feet. Bobbers coming to practice for the Olympics are Jay O'Brien and Billy Fiske.

Others come to swell the American colony are Mrs. H. H. Harjes and her son, John; Miss Louisa Ford Cape Elizabeth, Me., and Mrs. John Harris. Miss Mary Gold has joined her brother, Mr. Dick Gold of Chicago.

Washingtonians by this time have heard that William P. Eno, whose name is in the "phone book," has been promoted from Knight to Officer of the Legion of Honor. As traffic control expert and father of the one-way street, Mr. Eno is responsible for no end of Parisian necks that are not broken every year, and tons of uncrumpled mud guards.

Among the many ingenious schemes devised by Mr. Eno are the one-way traffic on narrow streets, which was instituted here on his suggestion in 1909. The "islands" on the Champs Elysees, which allow pedestrians to cross this avenue while taking refuge on three different elevated platforms, are an idea of his. Parisian taxi drivers can no longer vent their eagerness by tooting after a certain hour. Headlights are used for this purpose when nearing an intersection, affording rest and quiet to hard-working citizens.

That Mr. Eno continues to lay bags full of ideas was evidenced by his long talks with the prefecture of police traffic officials and Paul Guichard, Paris police director, when he visited Paris last summer. We will know all about them one of these days when the Paris police machinery finishes grinding them out.

Mahurin, and Mr. Geoffrey Creyke, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Geoffrey Creyke. Sprays of cream-colored roses and evergreens banked the altar and decorated the church. The Rev. J. Hillman Hollister officiated. A program of organ music was presented by Mr. Frederick S. Stitt.

Wearing the wedding gown which had been worn by Mrs. Creyke at her wedding, the bride entered the church on the arm of her father, who gave her in marriage. With the gown, which was of ivory, a princess model, fashioned with a long train and a deep square yolk of dutchess lace embroidered with pearls, the bride wore a coronet of orange blossoms and a veil of point applique lace, which had been worn by the aunt of the bridegroom, Mrs. Richard S. Paulett. Her bridal bouquet was of cream colored roses.

Peggy Silber Attends.

Miss Peggy Silber, who was maid of honor, was frocked in old rose damask, fashioned with a square neckline, puffed sleeves and a full skirt, ending in a short train. Rose cords laced the close fitting bodice. With her costume Miss Silber wore an off-the-face hat of rose maline and carried Talisman roses.

The bridesmaids, Miss Edith Mish, Miss Elizabeth Wurdeman, Miss Janet Young and Miss Molly Pagan, were frocked in models of ivory damask, made like that of the maid of honor, with which they wore hats of rose maline and carried bouquets of Briarcliff roses. Mr. Richard Paulett Creyke acted as best man for the bridegroom, who had as his ushers, Mr. Victor Knoop, Mr. Edward Northrop, Mr. Oliver Pagan and Mr. Minor Hudson.

Following the ceremony, a buffet was given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Creyke at the home of the bride's parents, 6802 Forty-fourth street, Chevy Chase, to which members of the bridal party and the immediate families were invited. Mrs. Mahurin wore a gown of rose crepe shot with silver with a corsage of roses and lilies-of-the-valley, and Mrs. Creyke, mother of the bridegroom, wore a model of crushed raspberry moire taffeta with a corsage of roses and lilies of the valley.

Gone to New York.

The young couple left in the evening for a wedding trip to New York and upon their return will make their home in Washington. The bride wore for traveling a suit of black suede cloth trimmed with black fox and a blouse of powder blue. Her accessories were black.

Among the out-of-town guests at the affair were Mr. and Mrs. Richard H. Paulett, of Farmville, Va.; Mr. and Mrs. Raymond V. Long and Miss Pauletta Long, of Richmond, Va., and Mr. and Mrs. A. M. McCabe, of Raleigh, N. C. Thursday evening a dinner party was given in honor of the young couple by Mr. and Mrs. Minor Hudson and on Friday evening a supper party was given at the Mayflower by Mr. Richard P. Creyke, who was best man for his brother.

The bride is a graduate of the George Washington University and Mr. Creyke is a graduate of law of the same school.

Cabinet Members to Be Patrons Of President's Birthday Ball

List Includes the Secretary of State and Mrs. Hull, Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Swanson, Justice and Mrs. Brandes, Foreign Ministers and Wives.

The list of patrons and patronesses for the President's Birthday Ball on January 30, has been announced by Mrs. Frederick H. Brooke and Mr. Coleman Jennings, committee chairmen.

Among those accepting are the Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull, the Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, Miss Mabel T. Boardman, Senator and Mrs. W. R. Austin, Justice and Mrs. Louis D. Brandeis, the Minister of Honduras and Mme. Lozano, Senator and Mrs. William H. King, the Minister of Portugal and Mrs. DeBianchi, the Minister of the Irish Free State and Mrs. McWhite, Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Hamlin, Mr. and Mrs. Manuel Gonzales-Haledon, Representative Isabella Greenway and the Egyptian Minister, Mr. Mohamed Amine Youssef.

In addition to serving on the patrons committee, Mrs. Brooke is vice chairman of the ticket committee of which Mr. C. Melvin Sharpe is chairman. Mrs. Brooke represents the Children's Hospital on this committee. Associated with her are Miss Anne Carter Greene, president of the Junior League, who is also chairman of the reception committee, which will be composed of memebrs of the Junior League, Mrs. Sidney F. Taliaferro, Mrs. Edward Goring Bliss, Mrs. Philip O. Coffin, Mrs. Frederick deC. Faust, Mrs. Henry Gratton Doyle and Miss Dorothy Bierer.

Practically the entire Board of Lady Visitors to Children's Hospital, of which Mrs. Brooke is chairman, is assisting her on both committees. Children's Hospital will receive 70 per cent of the funds derived from the ball. Mrs. Anne Carter Greene and the Junior League also take a major interest in Children's Hospital, maintaining the Social Service department.

The ball is expected to be the largest event of its kind ever held in Washington. Lacking an auditorium of sufficient size, the general committee, of which Commissioner George E. Allen is chairman, has arranged to use the ballrooms of the Mayflower, Shoreham, Wardman Park, Washington, Willard and Raleigh Hotels, with Guy Lombardo's orchestra and the featured entertainers appearing at each ballroom in turn. Tickets will admit to any or all of the hotels and this is leading to the planning of a number of "Flying Squadron" parties for the younger set which will include dinner at one hotel, short visits to all the others and end with breakfast at the last hotel visited.

The Washington Scene

By the Poe Sisters.

It's January again and to paraphrase the little boy in Eugene Field's "Picnic Time" in the souls of those who observe Washington tea hour, "there is a fillin' joy" as they go from house to house on Cabinet Wednesday at homes or congregate in the drawing rooms of the socially elite. There is something different and something novel to digest in food or conversation and methods of entertaining at each of these centers of hospitality. Just now there is an amusing, friendly rivalry between the hostess of the New Deal high command to outdo one another in unusual dishes to serve at the tea hour.

"Do go to the Morgenthaus, yum-yum!" was the word passed about from at home to at home by the seasoned veterans of this yearly campaign: "Good things to eat. Do try the fishballs!"

The Morgenthau fishballs. Ah, there, indeed, was a new wrinkle in tea-table delicacies! Hot from the fire, hot with savory herbs, served crisp and hot on toothpicks. The fishballs were each only as large as an English walnut, just big enough for two bites and then to be washed down with the rare sherry. Into the mouth, all in an instant. Hot—well, yes, Mrs. Morgenthau's cook had obeyed to the letter her strict injunctions that the fishballs must be hot when served to her guests. But they cooled off finally, and were they good? The seconds and thirds, in which nearly everyone indulged unabashed, were a proof of this. Then came another problem in etiquette. What was one to do with the toothpicks which had held the dainties? No proper guests would throw them on the floor nor could they be put on the table. Into pocketbooks, vanity bags, coat pockets, went the toothpicks and Washington society had achieved another victory in good manners.

On to the Hulls now—the menage of the Secretary of State, "Oh, yes, the eatin' the Hulls give yer is so fine" to quote Eugene Field's little dream boy again. Here the tea table was resplendent with huge baskets of candy, fruits, flowers, and "peppy sandwiches" cut in the shape of 2 cents in Chinese money with a hole in the middle of each sandwich. To return to Eugene Field again "The boss of all the picnic," was the Derns chatelaine in far away Highwood or at least it seemed far in comparison with the distance of other cabinet homes right in town. But the little journey is compensated by the home made ice cream and cake and the kind of sandwiches on which an army might march to victory and some of the most "second helping" kind of punch.

It is to smile, too, among the knowing at the teas among lesser official folk that follow hard upon those of the higher-ups. For their tea tables are brave with the decorations and even some of the goodies. Floral pieces are doing double service pepped up with aspirin and ice according to a formula first promulgated here by Mrs. Marshall, wife of Wilson's vice president. From time immemorial cabinet and other prominent hostesses have passed on flowers and uncut cakes and baskets of spun sugar to those giving teas after their own. Mrs. Champ Clark when here with the late Speaker wishing to honor "Gum shoe" William Stone (Bill Stone) on his birthday gave a birthday party for her fellow Missourian. A Missouri candy manufacturer sent Mrs. Clark a huge black gum shoe made of shining licorice, filled with candy flowers suggestive of the flora of that State. That gum shoe did duty at every Missouri congressional and official at home that season until it became literally as worn as an Old Shoe.

The flavor lingers in the memories of many who have turned the pages of Washington history during a number of recent administrations of the grape juice served in huge bowls on the lawn of Calumet place, leased by Secretary of State and Mrs. William Jennings Bryan from Mrs. John A. Logan, widow of the Black Eagle of the war between the States; the way in which Miss Edith Benham, then secretary for Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, now Mrs. James Helm, social secretary to Mrs. Roosevelt, can brew tea; the tiny brioches and delectable cheese canapes at Mrs. Hoover's White House teas; the tea and tiny biscuit filled with chopped bacon dispensed by Mrs. George Barnett, widow of the World War commandant of the United States Marine Corps, at her at-homes; the fluffy omelet one gets nowhere else so good as at Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock's luncheons, and the frothy topped caramel puddings at the board of Mrs. John George Rutherfoord, one of the smart young matrons of the city.

When the new White House china was ordered "butter chips," of course, were omitted from the service. Therefore, the friendly pilferers who make collections of such bits of other people's property were foiled in one direction, at least. In the old days White House butter chips were displayed proudly in the form of ash trays in the homes of honest plutocrats and aspiring modest house holders as well, and even the cave dwellers occasionally had them.

One of the prize tea table stories is of the Washington grande dame who enjoyed inviting a light fingered member of the social set to her luncheons just for the pleasure of seeing her secret one of her lace doilies. The English butler of the hostess and some of her intimate friends were in on the secret and relished the satisfaction the grande dame got out of the loss of her doilies while the "Kelptomaniac," to use a polite term, thought she was adding to her doilie collection unobserved.

A half-forgotten story was recalled last week when discussing this rather embarrassing souvenir hunting fad was of the fringe of diamante, pearls and jet Mrs. Warren G. Harding once wore on a white satin evening gown. After one of the White House receptions her maid noticed, on removing the dress, that a portion of the fringe had been taken. Souvenir hunting again, was the verdict.

LOST 28 POUNDS Never Felt Better!

I simply couldn't go through with all those kicking and bending exercises—they wore me out.

Then I tried to diet—but it didn't seem fair. I simply adore chocolate cake—and why should I have to give it up when all my slender friends eat it regularly and never seem to gain a pound?

Finally I learned about a simple corrective for abnormal obesity, known and prescribed by physicians the world over.—A corrective that would change the food I ate into energy instead of excess fat! And I learned that it was put up in convenient tablets containing exactly the right quantity—by one of the best-known medical laboratories in the United States.

And so I took Marmola—4 tablets a day—and quickly my excess fat began to disappear. What delighted me even more was the way I felt as a result of taking it—so mentally alert, so full of pep!

Now I'm down to normal—and never again will I let myself put on that deadening load of useless fat. Whenever I start to gain again, I take Marmola. It keeps my weight exactly right.

Thousands of women who have reduced the Marmola way might well tell you that story. Since 1907, more than 20,000,000 packages of Marmola have been purchased. Could you ask for any better recommendation than that?

Today—buy a package of Marmola, and start at once. You will soon experience Marmola's benefits. When you have gone far enough, stop taking Marmola. And you will bless the day you first discovered this marvelous reducing agent.

Marmola is on sale by dealers everywhere—from coast to coast.

Cleverly Applied Rouge, Facial Exercises and Good Creams, Make Mouth Beautiful

Quilting Art Of Pioneers Put on View

New National Museum Shows Needlecraft of 18th Century.

Extensive Collection Will Be on Display All This Month.

GREAT-GRANDMOTHERS and great-great-grandmothers of the present generation made with their own hands the clothing and bedding of their big families. But despite the enormous amount of labor involved, they found in their needlecraft and quilting an opportunity for artistic expression which afforded them release from the crushing monotony of the days before automobiles, telephones, moving pictures, or good roads.

Hence the needlecraft of the eighteenth and first half of the nineteenth centuries was far more than purely utilitarian. This is shown in an exhibit of American homecraft textiles which will be on display throughout this month in the foyer of the New National Museum at Tenth street and Constitution avenue.

The material represents the period from 1725 to 1850 and is made up of type specimens selected from the collections of the National Museum.

The exhibit begins with an interesting series of American samplers. These represent a type of embroidery done by every little girl, who was carefully brought up, as an evidence of her accomplishments in decorative needlecraft. The earliest piece shown is dated 1733 and worked without the usual bands and alphabet. Others in the series, dating from 1758 to 1830, portray alphabetical, architectural, genealogical, historical and theological subjects.

Another Type Displayed.

Another type of hand embroidery is illustrated by infants' caps and dresses. There are also specimens of crewel-work, raised work in velvet stitch, needlepoint embroidery, beaded work, etc.

Homespun household linens include sheets, pillowcases, towels, tablecloths and napkins. Some of these show interesting old patterns, such as "goose-eye" and "M's" and "O's," and are worked in cross-stitch with the initials of the owner and a numeral. It was the custom to number old linens and use them in rotation to prolong their usefulness. Worthy of special mention is a pictorial damask tablecloth, "Independence Hall, Philadelphia, Pa.," woven about 1780 in Vermont.

In the collection of all-white bedspreads, known as counterpanes, are rare examples of ancient tufted weaving, reversible "stuffed work," crewel-work, candlewick embroidery and couching and fancy knitting.

Colorful pieced and appliqued quilts show originality of design and skillful use of the needle. In the appliqued group is a beautiful "Tree of Life" pattern made in 1802. The design was cut from cotton printed in bird, tree and flower patterns in color on white. Another interesting piece of applique is an "autographed" quilt, formed of 60 squares, each representing the work of a different person and bearing the actual autograph of the maker. There is also a silk quilt appliqued in an original flower basket pattern. The unusual feature of this specimen is the very fine quilting, which required 1,001 skeins of silk thread.

Homespun Wool Blankets.

A unique specimen in the form of a hand-hewn, century-old quilting frame supplements the quilts. This was a necessary adjunct to the quilting bees of colonial and pioneer days, serving as a medium which gave expression to the housewife's art, as well as affording social pleasure.

While less colorful than the quilts, the case of homespun wool blankets contains interesting specimens of striped and plaid patterns. Shown with these is an unusual blanket-like "pressed quilt," a highly esteemed type of wool quilt made of glossy blue flannel lined with yellow flannel, with a slight wadding of carded wool, and quilted in an elaborate pineapple pattern. "For such a quilt the best fleece was set aside and many dyes steeped in the chimney corner."

The series of hand-woven coverlets is a fitting climax to the exhibit. Early in the seventeenth century the Puritans brought the weaver's art to America. The most typical product of American weaving was the colonial coverlet, a bed covering woven in patterns of colored wool over a plain-weave foundation of cotton or linen yarns. First in the series are those of simple, "overshot" weave which were homespun, home-dyed and home-woven in the mountain regions of the South. They were made in lighter weight than those of the North, as befitted the milder climate. Also, there are the heavier weight coverlets in this same weave which were made to meet the rigors of the New England climate. In the same group is an example of a twilled weave and an old ribbed weave of linen and wool.

BLENDING HER LIPSTICK and rouge with her own coloring and costume, pretty Cecilia Parker, featured motion picture player, follows the natural outline of her lips when applying lipstick. Before using lip rouge, however, she applies a little tissue cream to her lips to keep them soft and smooth. She believes one's lips should be accentuated, but not exaggerated in line.

Lips, Second Only to the Eyes As Sign of One's Personality, Require Careful Attention

By Gertrude Hummer.

NEXT to the eyes, a woman's mouth is her most expressive feature. The modern girl, therefore, would do well to study her mouth critically in the mirror and practice a few exercises to make her lips flexible. For tight lips hint of meanness, just as weak drooping corners mark the chronic whiner, and wrinkles indicate discontent and pettishness.

When following a program to beautify the mouth, first of all learn to smile. A smile is a great beautifier, for a healthy attitude of mind that naturally forms your lips into a pleasant expression is worth cultivating not only for its effect on your beauty but on your character as well.

Don't worry about the shape and size of your mouth. Cultivate a lovely expression and then let your lipstick or lip paste do the rest. For with real skill, the beauty of the lips may be enhanced, the color deepened, the mouth made more expressive and even the outline apparently changed.

Lubricants Required.

Before applying lipstick, however, make sure that your lips are soft and the skin around your mouth is velvety looking. Lips that have a tendency to be rough, cracked and chapped need treatment with softening and healing lubricants.

If you have the habit of moistening your lips with your tongue, try to stop it, for the evaporation of the moisture will only leave them drier and sorer. One way to remedy dry parched lips is to massage them with a good skin food every night the whole year around. Then cover them thickly with tissue cream, a greasy ointment or some other such healing libricant and leave it on all night. You should also do this during the day when you are working or during your bath.

Now that the weather is so cold it would be well before applying lipstick or paste rouge to rub a little of one of the above preparations into your lips. Remove any excess, then apply your make-up.

Pomades Recommended.

Another way to keep your lips soft is to use one of the lip pomades in lipstick form that are now on the market. They come colorless or in pale rose shades. You can either apply it as a base under your brightly colored lipstick or use it by itself as a daytime treatment for chapped lips.

Here are a few pointers on the type of lipstick to buy. When selecting one get the type that is creamy, but not greasy. The color should be indelible enough to be lasting, yet not injurious. It should blend with your natural color and with your cheek rouge as well as your dress.

Now comes the matter of application. For the average mouth, part the lips slightly, then with one sweeping stroke rouge the upper lip from the center to one corner and then from the center on the other side to the corner. With another sweeping stroke color the lower lip from one corner to the other.

Carry the rouge well inside the lips so that when they are parted in speaking there will be no lines that will show. Then blend the color carefully with the finger tip. Blot any excess lipstick with a cleansing tissue. Don't keep adding color on top of color, as it will only separate and leave an ugly effect. Let the color set for at least 10 to 15 minutes before eating or drinking.

Rouge Technique.

If your lips are too thin, you can make them look larger by carrying the rouge well over the edges and just the least bit beyond the natural outline of the lips. It is best to stop just at the natural outline first. Then with skillful blending you can carry the rouge a little beyond without leaving a definite lip line.

For thick lips blend the rouge in such a manner that the color fades away within the natural outlines. For a mouth that is too long carry the lip rouge just a little beyond the center and then blend it so that the color fades before reaching the corners.

Iron Exerts Vital Force Upon Blood

Ancients Used Strange Methods to Obtain Nutritive Metal.

Small Amount Required for Health Supplied in Average Diet.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

FROM ancient times man has used iron, and the iron age marked a distinct advance in human progress. The Greeks recognized the value of iron in the treatment of anemia and a favorite prescription was water in which a sword had been allowed to rust. Celsus, a Roman physician, advised the use of water in which a blacksmith had immersed red hot iron.

There are many substances essential to life. For example, we can live but a short time without renewing the supply of air, and the part played by water is well known. Lime is important; so is phosphorus, and numerous acid-forming elements such as chlorine. There are hundreds of elements and compounds that the body must have and hold, at least for the time being, in order to function. Some are used and then discarded, and one such is iron.

The value of iron to the chemistry of the body was not really understood until about the middle of the eighteenth century, when its presence was demonstrated in the blood. We now know that this metal plays a vital role in the life of every cell and serves as an accelerating agent in various chemical reactions, thousands of which occur in the body every hour.

Iron Widely Diffused.

Iron is widely distributed throughout the human frame, although the quantity is not large. The adult body needs only about 50 grains. Two-thirds of this amount is in the blood in the form of hemoglobin—the red coloring matter. It is, nevertheless, necessary to existence, and the supply requires regular renewal inasmuch as a small amount is eliminated daily.

Under ordinary circumstances approximately one-fifth of a grain is the daily ration of an adult, and the average diet furnishes more than enough. Meat, particularly red meat and liver, green vegetables and egg yolk are high in iron, while the white of egg, cereals and milk are low. Whole wheat and potatoes are fair sources. Even a person on an exclusive diet will receive sufficient amount as some vegetables, such as spinach, cabbage, Brussels sprouts, asparagus and lettuce, contain iron. In fact, most diets supply more iron than is required and the excess is either eliminated or stored (if needed) in the liver, the spleen and the bone marrow. Here it lies in an inactive state until it is required, when reabsorption occurs.

Starvation Shows Need.

A need for iron may be created by several situations, chief among these being a low intake, as in starvation or because of an improper diet, hemorrhage or disease responsible for the destruction of the blood. Hemorrhage sets up an emergency call upon the storehouses for iron replacement and, if long continued, as in chronic bleeding from a stomach ulcer or from hemorrhoids, the supply may become exhausted and sizable quantities be necessary to replace the deficit.

For many years a controversy raged as to whether the body could or could not use iron regardless of its chemical form. It is now known that either organic or inorganic iron can be utilized.

Iron may be given in several ways—under the skin, directly into the blood stream or by mouth, the latter being the usual and the preferable plan. An old and satisfactory method is the form known as Blaud's pills. If given in large doses digestive distress may result and, for this reason, physicians have learned that it is wise to prescribe small amounts.

Fortunately, iron is so widely distributed in nature and is so intimately mixed with our ordinary foods that supply and demand need give us but little concern.

Careful Forethought Will Help Wife to Solve An Awkward Problem Over Space for Books

First Decision Required Concerns Probable Growth of Library.

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

BOOKKEEPING needn't be a drone's job. Not if you consider your books both beautiful and conpanionable, because they can really be as decorative as your chintzes if you plan their arrangement with malice aforethought. The glowing pattern of mellowed bindings, the gleam of gilt lettering against dark leather . . . the heterogeny of colors . . . all blend together with the charm of a paisley shawl or a Persian rug.

Varied Selections.

But bookcases and book shelves can be quite a problem in the design of a room if they aren't treated with respect due them. The difficulty often comes with the attempt to stow away quite a respectable young library in odds and ends of small cabinets and cases. That means that books are always spilling over things, and besides it is likely to create a rather patchy effect. So it is a bright idea to consider the number of books you have—or expect to collect—before you commit yourself to ever so many small holders.

If your library is growing, then plan on lots more shelf space than you need right now. The vacant spots will gradually fill up and in the meantime, use them for bright bits of pottery, unusual pieces of copper or pewter, amusing bibelots.

For moderate numbers of books, there is a selection of interesting furniture to hold them. A pair of pier cabinets make a gracious design for a room and hold quite a good many books into the bargain. Or end tables with book shelves for bases work themselves pleasantly into the design of a modern room. The most usual—and all in all the most practical—piece of furniture for books is the secretary desk, truly the most utilitarian thing one can buy, because, in addition to its shelf space, it is a desk and a chest as well. But if you are tired of the effect of a secretary, then you might like the combination of a knee hole desk with a really lovely set of hanging shelves on the wall above to hold your books. Medium-size bookcases of handsome wood are practical for a medium-sized library and they are quite easy and congenial to adapt to many wall spaces.

For more than a casual number of books, built in shelves are very nice indeed. Especially recessed shelves that make a graceful pattern in the wall. The design of these can be widely varied—from a single row running like a frieze around all or part of the walls of the room . . . to a pair of rather formal recessed niches with arched tops to go on either side of a mantel or on either side of a wide doorway.

Shelves built like this are very decorative if you paint them and their linings in a color that contrasts with that used on the walls of the room. Recently we saw the most effective treatment of this kind in the apartment of the singer, James Melton. The living room walls were painted in a tone of sage green, a lovely color note was struck with a pair of damask covered arm chairs in a rich deep red . . . this color was then matched exactly for the linings of recessed book shelves on either side of the fireplace.

For a room with dark brown walls, the shelves are effective lined with dead white or with chartreuse. With ivory or white walls, we've seen the shelves painted in either turquoise or scarlet. Or white walls with nitches lined in emerald green or sapphire blue are lovely.

Harmonize With Windows.

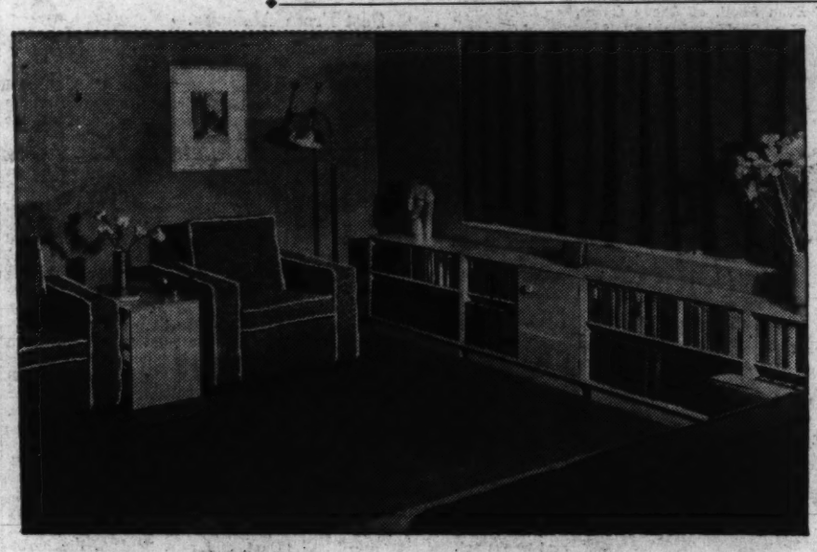
So we can content ourselves very well with shelves built against certain wall spaces. They're congenial when they're sized to fit between a pair of windows—or to fill the wall at either side of a window. More interesting still for a window wall is to fill in all the space around the window or windows with shelves—then use the top of the shelves under the window sills for window seats. Or frame the window with book shelves, then have glass shelves for flowers or glass built across the window.

A fireplace wall is the grandest place of all for books—whether you have the shelves all the way to the ceiling or just to the mantel shelf in order to have wall decoration or pictures above. In either case it's a genial plan to break the rows of books here and there in their shelves with pieces of polished brass, a brilliant pottery tea set, little porcelain figurines or pots of trailing ivy.

Harmonized Decorations Will Remove Most of the Drudgery.

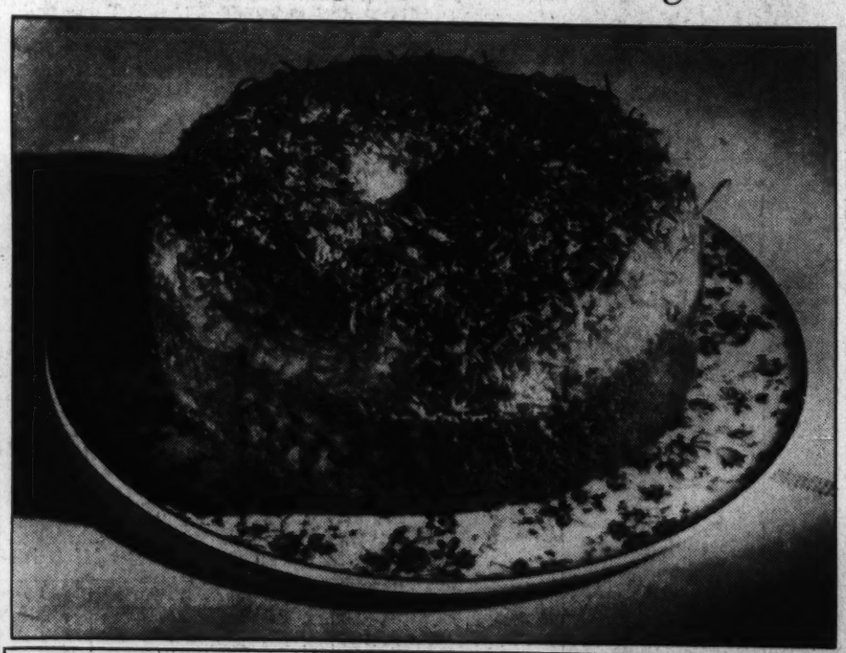
Pleasant Homes.

THERE is more than one way to plan your book shelves attractively. Elizabeth MacRae Boykin's new bulletin, "Planning Your Book Shelves," has helpful ideas on the subject as well as a pattern for covering bedraggled old books in bright new ways. It will be sent on receipt of a stamp to take care of the mailing cost.



NOTHING GIVES a living room such a pleasant atmosphere as attractively arranged book shelves. If you are in a dilemma about the arrangement of your books, have built-in shelves installed. You can readily see, by the above picture, how effective they are when placed under wide windows.

Manner of Mixing Fixes Fate of Angel Cake



DO YOU STILL tip-toe around the kitchen when the angel cake is in the oven, fearing that one heavy foot-fall will spell disaster to this featheriest of all cakes? Your angel cake will be a double of the cocoanut-crested version above—as light as spun sugar and tender to the last crumb if you mix and bake it by the following directions. Sift one cup of flour, but measure again after sifting and sift again four times. Beat one cup of egg whites and one-fourth teaspoon salt with a flat wire whisk. When foamy add one teaspoon of cream of tartar and continue beating until eggs are stiff enough to hold up in peaks, but not dry. Fold in carefully one and one-fourth cups of sugar, adding just two tablespoons at a time until all is used. Fold in three-fourths teaspoon vanilla. Then sift in small amount of flour over mixture and fold in carefully; continue until all is used. Turn batter into ungreased angel food pan. Sprinkle with one-half cup shredded cocoanut, if desired. Bake in a slow oven at least one hour.

Sullen Children Often Suffering Strange Malady

There Is No Doctor, Nor Any Medicine; Only Time Can Effect the Cure.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

DOES YOUR CHILD seem to have changed over night? Has he become morose, silent, irritable? Does he leave the family group when he can and retire behind the locked door of his own room? Does he refuse to take part in the ordinary family activities, claiming urgent duties of his own, which turn out to be a moody contemplation of nothing?

Is he inclined to be rude and sarcastic when spoken to with ordinary politeness? Is he careless of his health, sitting up till all hours, drinking forbidden coffee, smoking on the sly, eating cheap candy and reading trash?

But he was a stranger when he had measles and whooping-cough. His parents recognized that he was sick, and so were undisturbed even by his convalescent whims. His body was ailing. They knew the symptoms and knew also that he would in all probability recover. Furthermore, there was a doctor at hand to advise, medicines to give.

He was a stranger too, when he first started walking, and proudly refused a helping hand even from the mother who bore him. It did not worry her. He must learn to walk.

But this new phase of 16 and 17 She cannot recognize for what it is—another disease. Only time can cure it. There are no medicines, and doctors can give little advice. Again the child is learning to stand alone, but this time it is not his body but his spirit which is suffering.

Former Teacher of Domestic Science, Mason's Widow, Mother of Two Children, Needs Employment in Order to Save Home; Advice Solicited.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I am writing on behalf of a friend who is most anxious to find employment suited to her ability. She is a fine Christian woman of middle age, intelligent and capable, and is a widow with two children of 14 and 16 years. She was instructor of domestic science in a rural high school for many years, but resigned two years ago when the course branched out to include fields of study in home economics for which she had no scientific training. Since then she has been operating a cafeteria in her home-town high school, but some days she doesn't clear as much as $1. She is buying her home but has been unable to meet the payments since losing her job and fears the home will have to go unless she can find substantial employment.

She can qualify as fitter in a dress department, as hostess and as cafeteria manager. Can you suggest any way for her to make contacts leading to such employment in Washington? Do you know of a Mason of good standing who might be interested in helping her secure work? Her husband was a Mason of good standing.

• • • •

She has made every effort to get work through the Relief Administration, but has met with no success. What would you suggest as the solution of her problem? Very truly yours.

MRS. G. R.

The Thing to Do.

DEAR MRS. G. R.: Some weeks ago a thirty-third degree Mason in this city gave a substantial check to buy much-needed clothing for seven children in a family where the father is jobless and the mother doing general housework in a neighborhood house-hold for $3.50 a week. On receipt of your letter I called this man's office and found him out of the city for the month. Your appeal was stated to his secretary, who, in effect, had the following to say:

"Have the woman apply to the secretary of the lodge to which her late husband belonged. Lodge members take it upon themselves to look after the welfare of widows and orphans of deceased members in good standing. Their influence and contacts will be used in helping her find suitable employment, and if legal advice will aid her in retaining her home, she will receive it without expense."

It seems obvious that Masons in her own community, who knew her husband and who know her present need, can do far more effective work in securing this woman valuable contacts with Masons in Washington than I might hope to do.

• • • •

Once again, and in the friendliest spirit, may I call attention to a fact which many who solicit advice insist on overlooking, namely, that this column is not a job-finding agency?

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post, Woman's Page.

POEMS

Out of the Past

Grief.

I tell you, hopeless grief is passionless;
That only men incredulous of despair,
Half-taught in anguish, through the midnight air
Beat upward to God's throne in loud access
Of shrieking and reproach. Full desertness,
In souls as countries, lieth silent-bare
Under the blanching, vertical eye-glare
Of the absolute Heavens. Deep-hearted man, express
Grief for thy Dead in silence like to death—
Most like a monumental statue set
In everlasting watch and moveless woe
Till itself crumble to the dust beneath.
Touch it; the marble eyelids are not wet:
If it could weep, it would arise and go.

Fashion Critics Applaud Forthcoming Gowns of Gay Prints for the Spring Wardrobe

Bierman, Post Staff Photographer.

Latest Mode Is Dashing With Color in Profusion

By Frances Mangum,
The Post Fashion Editor.

PRINTS—gay, saucy, riotous prints—are forming the backbone of the early spring wardrobe. Dance dresses, dinner dresses, in prints, and prints. They're colorful! They're chic! And they're welcome to the fashion scene.

If the styling of these print harbingers of spring is prophetic of the coming silhouette, then we've an interesing season ahead. You'll note there are two dominant types. Slinky, narrow and straight—and freely flowing, full skirts. Two extremes, delightfully different.

• • • •

The old legend that Miss Stylish Stout must be warned and beware of prints has been definitely tossed aside. True enough, she must think twice before she swathes her generous curves in large prints, but the small ones, aha, that's a different tale. She can wear these with assurance that her extra poundage is well camouflaged.

• • • •

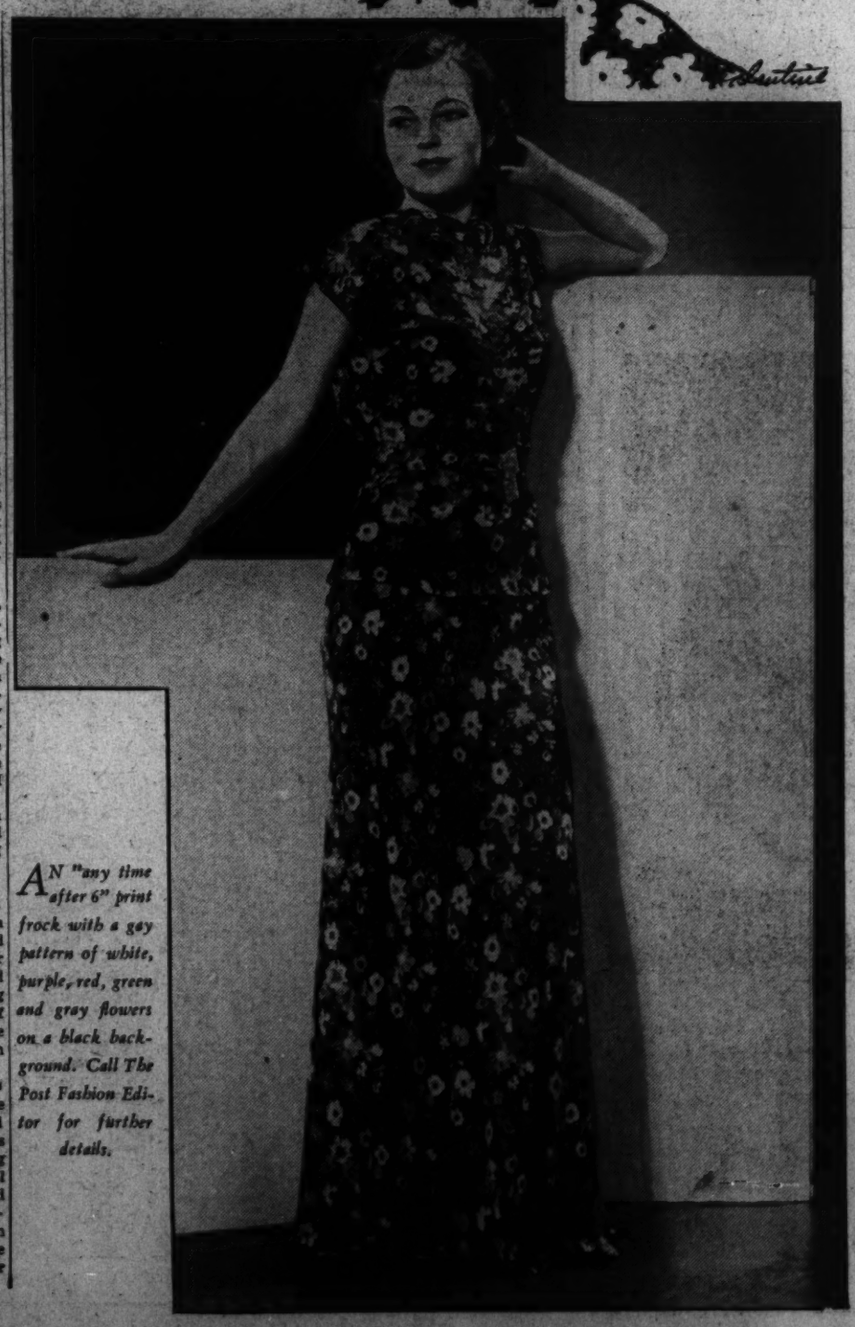
Contributing individual interest in prints are those that combine with solid color trims—jackets, drapes, or cloaks. Often the vivid colors of a print are brought out amazingly by a somber short cape or jacket. Sometimes a scarf or billowy drape contributes in the same smart manner. There was a time—and it was a time when stylists were shrieking that prints must be handled with care and designed by conservative hands—when one dared risk only one contrasting shade. Now, what a different tune. Two, three, four, sometimes more colors are used to bring out the vivid print pattern.

• • • •

One fashion prophet when called upon to give his ideas of most popular colors for prints hesitated long and was inclined to think that all and every color shared equal laurels. Finally he ventured a guess that blues, greens and rose beige might receive the most votes.

FUSIA, rose, gray, green and blue flowers are scattered over this clinging white chiffon-like dress above. The velvet bands are a deep fusia.

THE GRACEFUL shoulder drapes and the plaited band across the front neckline echo the Grecian influence in this gay floral print shown above.



AN "any time after 6" print frock with a gay pattern of white, purple, red, green and gray flowers on a black background. Call The Post Fashion Editor for further details.

Breeziness of Conduct With Elders or Strangers Operates Against Them—Few Fail to Note Lack of Politeness Toward Parents.

By Margaret Wallace.

THE GIRLS AND YOUNG MEN who succeed in business, the Government and in social circles are, without doubt, those who know how to be courteous. The debutante, her older sister and the young matron are judged by the manner in which they conduct themselves. The well-mannered debutante is apt to be invited to assist older and important women at teas and receptions. The young man who is always cordial and courteous also will be the first to be invited to fill in at an important dinner or to be one of the escorts at other functions.

Breeziness Discredited.

One of the first rules of courtesy for young people is to avoid the too-free, easy manner among strangers, older people, employes or persons of distinction. They may smile at the breeziness, but when they are making their selections for business or social lists they will be apt to choose the more polite type of young person.

While in this day of ageless men and women no one, especially a woman, likes to be treated like an old person. But the young woman who rises when introduced to an older woman, who takes the trouble to introduce her, see that she has a seat in a public place and other little courtesies will make a better impression than the young girl who ignores such rules of common politeness. While all men like to be thought young, a realy polite young woman will rise when introduced to an elderly man or a man of distinction.

Young girls who forget to be polite to their mothers as, alas, so many young girls do in these days, make very poor impressions on all beholders.

Questions Answered.

Query—I am inviting a friend of my daughter's to luncheon. She is in Washington for a few days with her mother. I feel I should call on the mother and invite her also. My daughter says this is not necessary. It seems very rude to me.

Answer—You should certainly call on the mother of your daughter's friend. She should be invited to luncheon with her daughter unless you have her at another time to meet your friends. The invitations to such separate luncheon parties should be sent at the same time.

Query—I have been going to dances with a young man. His mother is one of the chaperons. I am very popular and dance all the dances and young men cut in all the time. My escort wants me to take time to meet his mother and talk to her. This would, of course, interfere with my dancing. Is it rude of me to refuse to let him escort me to his mother and present me? He says it is.

Answer—The young man is right. It is very rude of you not to comply with his request to present you to his mother. You must accept the very next time. If she invites you to sit down by her and talk for a while, you must do so and make yourself as pleasant as possible.

Query—I have just come to Washington and have a Government position. There is a young man in the same department I like very much. We have never been introduced, but we speak in the elevator. He has induced a young lady in the office to give a supper party and invite us both. She wants me to let the young man call for me and escort me to her house. Will this be proper?

Answer—Quite proper, although it would be better if your friend could introduce you to the young man in advance.

Query—I was introduced to a young man I like very much at a dance of our State society. He asked to call at my house. My mother says the kind of introduction I had to him does not warrant him asking for the privilege. The president of the society introduced us. If he does come should he call on both my mother and myself?

Answer—The introduction to this young man seems in order because the president of the society vouched for him. He is perfectly within his rights to ask the privilege of calling at your home. Of course his call should be on both your mother and yourself. Mothers nowadays tactfully find something to call them away for at least part of the time when a young man calls on their daughters.

Variable Styles Noted in France

Notions for the Midseason Cover Wide Field With Conclusion Difficult.

By the United Press.

PARIS, Jan. 18.—The mid-season collections at the numerous Paris fashion houses are so variable that it is difficult to form a general conclusion as to just what constitutes the 1936 silhouette. It is certain, however, that the line will remain straight with a slight blouse at the waist and a slightly flaring skirt.

The tailored suit takes an important place for every hour of the day and night, ranging from the sport suit, through town costumes, cocktail suits up to the extremely formal midnight suit. Blouses vary in cut, some being high at the neck and others showing a low decollete.

Two coat types are seen, one fitted and moulded, while the other is loose with back fullness achieved by tucks or pleats. Both types are seldom as long as the dress, both have wide sleeves and have collars that are extremely small or non-existent.

The evening silhouette points definitely toward suppleness with a certain amount of draping and blousing. Skirts are moulded to the knee where there is frequently shirring before a flare to the floor. Sleeves play an important part and are long, short or wing-like. Materials include uncreasable velvets, taffetas, satins, chiffons and laces.

Much attention is stressed on details whose originality is amusing. The military loops, braid and frogging are still good and more feminine lacy, lingerie touches are equally smart. Belts are important and are found in fabric, leather, straw and colored metal.

Radio Style Setters.

Among radio comedians, Jack Benny takes dress very seriously. He tends to bankerish conservatism. His favorite garb is a dark grey suit, all-white shirt and plain color tie—usually maroon.

Fred Allen claims to have started the fashion of the casually wrinkled "English drape" suit.

"For years," he said, "I have been falling asleep at my desk in an all-night search for new jokes. Thus I often have been obliged to start the new day in a suit well wrinkled from having been slept in.

Old Lace Seen Often at Events In White House

Mrs. Roosevelt Has Bertha of Rich Trimming for Evening Dress.

By Pattie Ellicott.

AT A RECENT White House reception many of the best dressed women wore some kind of rare old lace on their velvet gowns.

Mrs. Roosevelt wore a particularly lovely lace bertha on her evening dress at the reception of the judiciary.

Mrs. Morgenthau, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, wore at a recent reception at the White House a lovely cape-like collar of point lace with her black velvet gown.

Next to the black evening gowns seen at recent official evening parties the all-white evening gowns is most distinguishd by its smartness.

Miss Elizabeth Roberts, the tall, handsome daughter of Associate Justice and Mrs. Owen D. Roberts, has an evening gown of very heavy chalk-white crepe. This is made with a deep square decolletage and with no sleeves. The skirt has a Grecian draped effect.

Miss Betsy Dern is wearing a white satin evening gown made on very simple lines. But she sometimes wears a cherry-colored velvet bertha and sash with it.

Mrs. Henry Ashurst, wife of the Senator from Arizona, had on a dress of red velvet made on draped lines at one of the recent evening parties. Mrs. Ashurst wore at one of the afternoon teas a costume of green velvet with hat to match.

Mrs. William E. Borah, wife of the Senator from Idaho, is wearing a dress of beige velvet with gold trimming. With this Mrs. Borah wears a hat of brown felt with a band of gold on it.

Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State, has an afternoon gown of deep fuchsia crepe embroidered all over in tiny gold dots. This is made in classic draped effect.

Mrs. Lawrence Roberts, wife of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, is wearing an afternoon gown of black velvet made with a full skirt and long, close-fitting sleeves. With this she wears a cape of silver fox and a small, black velvet hat with a flaring veil coming just below the eyeline.

Chinese Art Rules Style For Spring

Fashion Creators Drawn to London to Take Notes at Exhibit.

Statue Put on Display by Mrs. Rockefeller There Highly Prized.

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, Jan. 18.—Dame Fashion has turned her eyes for inspiration from the Italian Art Exhibition, recently held on the Continent, to the Chinese Art Exhibition at Burlington House in London.

Fashion creators from all parts of Europe are among the 4,000 persons who visit the exhibition daily in search of ideas.

The draperies of the headless Bodhisattva, attendant on Buddha, loaned to the exhibition by Mrs. J. D. Rockefeller, jr., of New York, will, for example, give a new skirtline to spring fashion.

These Chinese draperies, which were sculptured at least a thousand years ago, are considered by fashion experts as in keeping with the trend of today.

Coming Next Season.

They will be used in next season's London and Paris collections.

The statue shows a swag of drapery under the knee, drawing the skirt in and upward.

Fabric manufacturers, moreover, claim they have found new tones in the pottery exhibits. The gray-blues are being tried out on silks and crepe romaines. Snug gray-blues are being adopted for fine spring woolens.

Chinese artists, it is pointed out, excel in their shades of gray, which are entirely different from the blue and silver tones of Western fashion. They range from tea-dust—a dark brown with a gray tinge—to celsdon, which is as much gray as it is green.

Other Chinese art shades are moon-white, underglaze-red, roasted-rice, seeded-green, onion-green and peach-bloom. In the off-white shades, apart from moon-white, there is blue-white and green-white. Underglaze-red is like crushed loganberries. Roasted-rice is a gold-brown color new to fashion.

Influenced by Chinese.

Some of these colors have already been displayed here in gowns showing the Chinese influence. An evening dress with a short coat cut on straight Chinese lines is of satin in moon-white and underglaze-red. The long moon-white gown has inverted pleats at the sides which show an insertion of red inside, and the hip length, loose coat is trimmed with red.

Two Banks Set Up FHA Departments

Newark, N. J.—Benefits to financial institutions from co-operation with the Federal Housing Administration program have led two banks in this city to establish departments for the handling of this work. These institutions are the United States Savings Bank and the West Side Trust Co.

The United States Savings Bank is one of the oldest savings banks in the State and one of the pioneers among savings institutions in becoming an approved mortgagee of the Federal Housing Administration. It has selected Edmund E. Rung as the head of this department. Rung recently resigned as the financial field representative of the New Jersey division of Federal Housing Administration to accept the position.

The West Side Trust Co. was one of the early leaders in modernization work under the Federal Housing plan, having loaned $774,000 in this field to date. John F. Dolan, jr., formerly connected with the Motor Finance Corporation of Newark, heads the new department, according to announcement of Ray E. Mayham, president of the institution.

Bright Laundry Walls Lessen Wash Drudgery

Most home laundries have walls that are white—or were once white; floors of dull gray cement color, and tables and tubs that add not a whit to the prospect of a pleasant wash day. Why not have the walls painted in a bright and cheerful color—a pale pinkish buff, light daffodil yellow or a soft blue-green? The floor can be coated with a cement floor paint—deep blue, jade green or chocolate brown and the woodwork can, likewise, be colorful and gay. Such a color treatment will take a lot of the curse off "Blue Monday."

D.C. Realtors To Give Dance At Mayflower

Annual Frolic, February 11, Will Feature Skits on Members.

With announcement this week by F. Eliot Middleton, president of the Washington Real Estate Board, of the personnel of various committees arranging the annual dinner and dance of the board, plans now in hand are rapidly going forward for the most outstanding affair in the board's history.

This year, the dinner and dance will be held at the Mayflower Hotel on Tuesday, February 11, in the main ballroom. The entertainment committee, under the chairmanship of Edward R. Carr, has given a great deal of time and effort in formulating skits on some of the most prominent local realtors. These promise to be a real treat, together with a program of entertainment which, according to present plans, will surpass all previous performances. An outstanding radio orchestra will furnish music for dancing during and after the dinner program.

EDWARD R. CARR.

Karl E. Jarrell, with the assistance of his dinner committee, is arranging with the Mayflower Hotel officials a sumptuous and appetizing menu.

Headed by President Middleton, the invitations committee will extend invitations to high Federal and District officials.

2d Post Home Provides Many Novel Features

Exterior Is of English Type; Refinements in Interior.

Many refinements have been introduced into the second Washington Post model home for the new year, which opens for inspection today at 5008 Third street northwest. This house is one of a new group just completed by Max Sugar, well-known builder, and placed on sale by J. Garrett Beitzell, realtor, with offices in the Tower Building.

9 New Homes By Newbold's To Open Soon

'Thriftee-Step' Offerings at Bethesda Are Unique in Small-House Layout.

Nine New Thriftee-step homes, designed and built by the Newbold Development Co., will open shortly in Newbold's two Bethesda developments—Glenbrook Village, off Wisconsin avenue, and Glenbrook Knoll, on Old Georgetown road. This group forms the initial Newbold presentation for 1936. All the homes, which are unique in small home arrangement, will be priced reasonably.

Some of the houses at each development have reached the stage of construction that will give Washington homeseekers a splendid opportunity to see the construction details of a "Thriftee-Step" home. Other houses, more nearly completed, give an accurate picture of their finished arrangement and room-size. The Newbold Development Co. invites the inspection of these houses during their construction.

At Glenbrook Knoll, on Old Georgetown road, there is one home at 105 Northbrook lane, completed and tastefully furnished by Hutchison, which will enable one to inspect the complete metamorphosis of Newbold construction from foundation work to the completely furnished home.

All of this group of homes have been inspected and approved by the architectural section of the Federal Housing Administration and are eligible for loans under the Federal Housing plan, it is announced. Both developments radiate from the Bank of Bethesda, Glenbrook Village, one-half mile beyond on Wisconsin avenue; Glenbrook Knoll, one-half mile beyond on Old Georgetown road.

Drop Cloths Important In Exterior Painting

When you're having exterior painting work done, be sure that your painter uses drop cloths to cover any shrubbery or walls that might be defaced by paint spots. Remember when hiring a painting contractor that skilled workmanship and quality materials are of tremendous importance. Skimping on either is foolish economy.

Nearly Billion Paid Last Year On B-L Stocks

Many Shareholders Use Dividends to Buy or Build Homes.

Investors in building and loan associations received a total of $835,000,000, in 1935, in the form of maturities, share re-purchase, dividends, and cash loans on the security of their shares. This approximate figure on the reward paid to the systematic saver and the lump-sum investor is given by the United States Building and Loan League, the national organization of this type of institution.

That the figure represents a normal turnover in the funds of these home lending institutions is pointed out by H. T. Donaldson, Lansing, Mich., first vice president of the league. He stresses disbursements on maturing shares as one of the significant factors in the recovery drive, since the dollars thus paid out represented the fruits of frugality during the prosperity era.

The repurchases by the associations of the partially paid-for shares of their investors combined with the maturity payments to make a disbursement of some $500,000,000, Mr. Donaldson said. He indicated that a large percentage of the shares, which matured were not cashed in by the investors, but were kept in the savings, building and loan associations as full-paid shares continuing to earn dividends.

Huge Dividend Payments.

"Dividends for the year accounted for about $260,000,000 of the payments to shareholders, Mr. Donaldson said. "These were distributed on a semi-annual or quarterly basis, and the last distribution of earnings was completed on the first of the year. The record of continuous dividend payments on the part of a large group of associations, and the resumption of dividends by the great majority of the remainder, will be more effective this year than at any time since 1930 in bringing new money into the associations. Significant reports already forwarded by representative associations since the first of the year show that the opening of new accounts by the public has run far ahead of any January period in the past five years."

Mr. Donaldson believes that 1936 will see many more new accounts opened than matured accounts paid out or partially matured shares withdrawn.

"The $500,000,000 paid out in share maturities and repurchases has been used by the shareholders in many instances as a down-payment on the purchase or building of a home," the league official said. "In such cases, particularly, the money saved over from the last prosperity era has been used to stimulate the capital goods market in today's climb to another period of prosperity. This money has been helpful because a revival of home building depends, fundamentally, upon the would-be borrowers' having some stake of their own to put in the property at the beginning, in addition to the mortgagee's advance.

"A large part of the money which savers received from the associations as a result of their former thrift has gone into other markets, materially increasing the turnover of goods and the general business expansion which has been noted. Aside from its function on the lending side as the most practical home financing institution in the Nation, the building and loan association is contributing to the encouragement of the American investor and his belief in his ability to provide his own social security.

Packing Box Bed Table Antidote for Dull Hours

When a youngster is confined to bed with measles, mumps, or what-have-you, an excellent antidote for dull hours is a bed table that can be made from a packing box. The sides should be removed, but the ends should be left for supports. Then the whole contraption needs a couple of coats of bright enamel or lacquer to make it gay and cheerful and to do away with the hazard of splinters. Fire engines, trucks and mechanical animals can be trundled across the surface of the play table with equal facility.

Home Gardeners Find Many Uses for Hotbeds

In the winter months home gardeners in urban communities will find many advantages to be derived from the properly constructed hotbed. Generally built of wood and glass, a hotbed will preserve many delicate flowers and plants from cold and frost.

Late vegetables may also be "forced" in hotbeds that provide a source of food supply prior to the cold months. These hotbeds are easily constructed for a small outlay of money and are worth many times more than their cost to those who have space for the growing of plants and vegetables.

Across the Threshold

By Margaret Tyler.

January is showing us that already many Washington people are making good their New Year's resolution to make 1936 investments in Washington property. Homes just finished are selling often on the first day they are opened for public inspection. After going through some of these homes, I can see why anyone would want to buy them and also why they are such an excellent investment. Builders are taking great care to use the finest possible materials in construction and using forethought in building every possible convenience and modern improvement to make the homes as livable and comfortable as is possible.

This week's Post Model Home at 5008 Third street northwest, is a beauty. It is situated on a high elevation and is only a block from Washington's new park, which is now being completed. The house is of English type architecture. The terrace is nicely landscaped and presents an effective appearance with its small fir trees and shrubbery. The steps lead over the threshold, through the arched door and into the hall with its hospitable guest closet and cheery arched window.

Woodwork of Chestnut.

I found the woodwork throughout the house is of chestnut, a wood permitting very little shrinkage. The draperies are furnished by John Ligon. They are enticing in color and appropriate in texture and type for each room in the house. The furniture is by Hutchison. Every room has its own feature that makes it outstanding and distinctive. The living room, with its Venetian blinds, is made even more attractive by a brick corner fireplace and semicircle hearth. An arched doorway leads to the dining room, which is spacious and charming.

The bright kitchen, red-trimmed, has every conceivable built-in feature, from console gas range, built-in cupboards, drawers and broom closets to the latest electric refrigerator and table top gas stove. Above the sink is a wall fixture for an electric clock and an attractive wall light.

In the basement is a pine paneled recreation room. It has three windows facing the street, giving a grand front view and making the place light and sunny. There are many electric outlets providing convenience in connecting lamps, radios, etc. A corner fireplace with brick semicircle hearth accents the colonial atmosphere. In the basement are also laundry tubs, lavatory, automatic oil burner and other fixtures.

Spacious Closets.

On the second floor there are two spacious closets in the hall—one a large cedar closet, another a linen closet.

The master bedroom is a dream of perfection. In one wall is a nook enclosing vanity dresser. Two closets are on each side, each closet with a full-length inset mirror in its door. When these doors are opened, magic-like, a little

Fluorescent Paint Used in Night Club

San Francisco night club visitors are marveling at a new type of wall decoration. When the lights are turned off, the club goers gaze at walls which bear scenes in glowing colors, with depth and distance simulated on a perfectly flat surface.

According to an issue of Business Week, this all comes about through the development of a fluorescent paint in which luminiscent materials are combined with oils and activated by ultra-violet light.

Cooper-Hewitt arcs in the ceiling are enclosed in deep purple glass tubes which screen out all visible light rays, leaving only ultra-violet. Two University of California students, Robert and Joseph Schweitzer, amateur magicians searching for new tricks, hit upon the scheme.

Deadline Today In Competition For Home Plan

Miller Brothers' Contest to End First Stage; $100 Prize Set.

Nothing in years has promoted more intensely the sense of home-consciousness in Washington than the "My Home Competition" of W. C. & A. N. Miller, realtors and builders. The first stage of the contest closes tonight, when the last ideas of men, women, girls and boys about "their kind of home" will be deposited at the Washington Board of Trade to await the judges' decision.

Three judges will next choose the five best ideas in home design submitted in this contest, which was open to every one in the Washington metropolitan area, with the exception of employees of the Miller firm and professional architects. The selections of the judges will be turned over to a committee of the American Institute of Architects, and the second stage of the contest will then begin.

Ideas selected will be divided among the number of competing architects for development in accordance with the rules and regulations set forth in the institute's code of ethics. The judges will make a selection of the best development of each idea and the architect preparing the design will be paid the regular commission.

There are five awards to be made for each idea. Scale models of the winning designs will be made and placed on display at Woodward & Lothrop's, where the public will vote on their merits. The winning model will be that among the five receiving the highest number of votes. A cash prize of $100 is offered for the winner and a home will be built in the Miller development of Westerleigh from the winning design.

The competition has aroused the interest of builders, architects and the public. Nothing lately has made the Washington public so conscious of the part the architectural profession plays in building a house than this idea of the Miller brothers. Nothing has proved so beneficial or stimulating to the architectural profession and building industry.

Colonial Pine Paneling Featured in Museum

In the colonial room at the Museum of the City of New York pine paneling from an old house at 29 Cherry street is used. This is painted light gray, following a fashion of the day. The woodwork dates from about 1765 and is a rare example, since little early woodwork has been found in the city. Other alcoves in the museum's historical display of costumes and furniture have light blue walls, also a popular paint color during pre-Revolutionary days.

Sheet of Wall Board Useful in Boy's Room

A useful bit of equipment for a boy's room is a sheet of wallboard attached to one wall with a narrow molding tacked around the edge. This supplies a handy place to put up drawings, posters, prints and other material. The wallboard can be painted to match the wall against which it is placed or may be coated in a contrasting color. The molding can be finished to match the woodwork of the room.

Group Decides To Establish Realty School

New President Reveals Association's Aims for New Year.

Establishment of a permanent National institute for instruction of real estate men in all branches of the business was decided upon last week at the closing session of a three-day meeting of officers, directors and group leaders of the National Association Real Estate Boards at the Washington Hotel.

A proposed program of association activities for 1936 was set forth Friday night in the inaugural address of Walter W. Rose, Orlando, Fla., its new president. Speaking at a banquet attended by more than 150 National and local realtors, Rose enumerated, among various objectives: improvement of existing real estate license laws and adoption of license acts in States not having them; increased membership, modernization of tax laws to give a more equitable tax situation to real estate through an over-all limitation on real estate taxes by State constitutional provision; valuation of real estate for tax purposes on the basis of income, or productivity, and a spread of school costs to a wider bases.

More favorable conditions for the home builder, such Federal action as will complete a sound workable mortgage system and encouragement of State and National legislation beneficial to real estate with a minimum of Governmental competition are among other aims.

Walter S. Schmidt, Cincinnati, retiring president of the association, reported a growth of membership during 1935 and predicted that land sales this year would double those of last. Mr. Schmidt installed the new officers, directors and heads of the association's specialized units. Among those assuming office were Waverly Taylor, Washington, D. C., a director, and J. C. Nichols, Kansas City, Mo., member of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, a vice president of the association.

Among guests of the association at its banquet were Robert V. Fleming, Washington, D. C., president of the American Bankers Association, who spoke informally. President F. Eliot Middleton of the Washington Real Estate board, presided and Roger J. Whiteford, local board counsel, was toastmaster. Thirty-one States and the Dominion of Canada were represented at the conference.

Rose, the new president of the National Association is a member of the Flordia State Senate, where he has been the leader of the notable movement for modernization of State tax structure.

He went to the Senate by a vote of more than 2 to 1, over three opponents, following two years service as president of the Flordia Real Estate Association, during which period under his leadership the association formulated one of the most comprehensive programs any State real estate group has yet worked out as legislative objectives in the march toward a more equitable tax situation for real estate.

The new president earlier led the fight of the Flordia Real Estate Association to curb "binder" real estate operators and protect the public and protect the future of Flordia real estate from ill-conceived or fraudulent operations in the State during the boom period. As president of the State association at this time he was leader of the movement to enact a real estate license law for Flordia. When the law was enacted, in 1925, he was appointed chairman of the Flordia Real Estate License Commission and was chairman of the commission from 1925 to 1933, when he resigned after being elected to the State Senate.

Rose is president and owner of the Walter W. Rose Investment Co., Orlando, Fla., engaged in real estate brokerage and subdivision development. Among Mr. Rose's developments is the 350-acre Orwin Manor region, in Orlando.

The new president has served the National Association as a member of its board of directors for nine years and during the past year has been a member of its executive committee.

He was one of the organizers of the Orlando Real Estate Board and served as its first president. He has been active in civic matters in both town and State. He also has baseball history, being president of the Florida League of Baseball Clubs for five years and a member of the National Board of Arbitration of Minor Baseball Leagues.

Firm Reveals $58,679 Gain In Assets in '35

Federal-American Closes Its Fiscal Year With Profit of $30,306.

Federal-American Co. has closed a successful fiscal year. President John Poole, of the company in an announcement to shareholders, shows its net worth December 31, 1935, was $662,394.26, as compared with one December 31, 1934, of $603,714.32, an increase of $58,679.94. The above figures include the item of "unearned discount." Operating profits for 1935 were $30,306.80; for 1934, $21,734.31; for 1933, $11,287.27. Liabilities, December 31, 1934, were $593,389.07, but December 31, 1935, were only $403,487.74, a reduction, or improvement of $189,901.33.

Combined reserves are $198,716.22. These accounts have been set on the books to provide for the contingency of losses and depreciations. To whatever extent values improve, the net worth will also. A footnote on the financial statement shows that it is also subject to cumulative dividends on the preferred stock for the years of 1933, 1934 and 1935. An assessment of $93,040 on bank stock owned has been paid in full. Certificates of deposit, amounting to $249,377.78, representing money deposited with or loaned to the company, have also been paid in full.

President Poole concludes by stating that 1935 has been a year of substantial progress. He says, "The company is a going concern and is not being liquidated. It is in no way connected with the Federal-American National Bank & Trust Co. It has not only survived the depression of the past several years, but it has successfully emerged and is now in a strong financial condition with lots of life and vigor, as evidenced by its splendid statement and its comparative report of operating profits."

President Poole and the following officers of the company were re-elected: Leon Tobriner, vice president and general counsel; John W. Fisher, secretary-treasurer; Nathan Poole, assistant treasurer.

Four Homes Sold By J. R. Henderson

Bungalows in Bethesda, Md., Purchased.

Four bungalows, recently completed by J. R. Henderson on McKinley street in Huntington terrace, Bethesda, Md., have been sold. These are 219 McKinley street, purchased by E. E. Zuck; 217 McKinley street, purchased by Howard F. McMurdie; 215 McKinley street, bought by Miss Kimmell as an investment, and 211 McKinley street sold to Mrs. Mattie Sayles.

These bungalows have five rooms, bath, slate roof, furred walls, weatherstripping, ultra modern kitchen and are located on lots 62½ by 115 feet. Henderson now has the first Washington Post model home of 1936 open at 202 Roosevelt street, in the same subdivision. This house is open for inspection daily and Sundays. About 300 persons viewed this home when it opened last Sunday.

Colored Card Tables.

Color will give character to an otherwise uninteresting piece of furniture—the card table, for instance. Usually so stereotyped in appearance, it will be far more attractive if painted in a distinctive color scheme; bittersweet red for the frame with a jade green top, brown with old gold, or two tones of blue.

Wallboard Is Used To Cover Garages

Some wallboards now on the market can be used successfully as outside covering for a house or garage or other building. They are treated in the manufacturing process to make them impervious to water.

If you feel a bit skeptical, you may give them added protection by painting them when erected. These boards come in various sizes up to 8 by 14 feet, and can be cut with a saw to any shape.

They have even been used as linings for shower baths in beach cottages and bath houses, and after several seasons of use show little or no sign of deterioration.

Kass Company Presents New Homes Today

Luxurious Appointments Feature These Dwellings in Embassy Section.

Ten stately Georgian-type homes, built by Kass Realty Co., are being presented today by Shannon & Luchs Co. Located at 2547 to 2561 Waterside drive, they are situated in the dignified Embassy section, where Waterside drive meets Massachusetts avenue. They will be open for inspection today and daily.

Constituting the closest in-town residential group overlooking Rock Creek Park in the exclusive Massachusetts avenue and Embassy sections, their setting is a beautiful one.

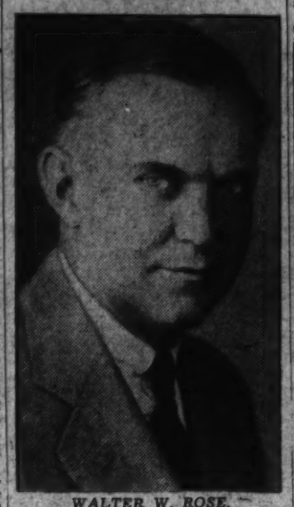
These houses are unique in location, plan and appointments. They are artistic, differently planned and an interesting departure from the usual, containing four bedrooms, two baths and recreation room. Other features are colonial mantels and recessed, built-in bookcases in the living rooms.

Step-up studio dining rooms with four French doors leading to wall-inclosed patios, fireplaces in the master bedrooms and random-width floors downstairs are included. Other equipment and appointments include colonial-type brass fixtures, leaded glass bay windows in the dining rooms, concealed radiators painted, washable walls, ultra modern kitchens with monel metal sinks, latest type cabinet units, largest size Electrolux refrigerators, gas heat, pine-paneled recreation rooms with arched doorways, fireplaces and bars.

Rustic Furniture Hints.

Rustic garden furniture which has shed so much bark that it looks too ragged may be refinished by scraping off the remaining bark and then painting it. If a natural finish is preferred and the wood is not too discolored, several coats of spar varnish will preserve the original light color.

President



WALTER W. ROSE, Orlando, Fla., newly elected president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, who was inducted into office at a meeting of the association here last week.

Victorian Brackets Are Back in Fashion

The corner bracket of grandmother's day is definitely in fashion among those who like a quaint Victorian touch. Those who have old ones are bringing them down from the attic or in from the woodhouse. Copies are being made by the newly revived jigsaw, once laughed out of fashion, but now becoming popular again. Brackets may be painted white to follow the vogue for white accessories.

Wax Dulls Gloss.

Floor varnishes usually present a good gloss, although some are marketed in the form of dull or mat finishes. When the high gloss varnishes are applied and it is later desired to have the floors present a duller appearance, such floors may be waxed occasionally to obtain this effect.

dressing room is automatically created with full-length mirrors on two sides, a vanity mirror in the center. With the marvelous lighting here, milady will know every detail of her dress is faultless for she can see perfectly from every side.

A connecting lavatory is in green tile with accenting black trim. The door is exceptionally easy to clean. It doesn't show those watermarks which are such a concern to every housewife.

On High Elevation.

There are two other attractive bedrooms. The main bathroom is finished in buff tile with accenting black trim.

Every feature of the house is especially inviting—even its location—near transportation facilities, surrounded by new, attractive homes and on a high, dry elevation.

I visited another new house at 5319 Second street northwest. This is an unusually attractive modernistic home. The living room has a stone corner fireplace with semi-circle hearth, nice floors, bright cream and silver wallpaper making the room appear very large. It is equipped with electric wall fixtures and many wall plugs. The Venetian blinds accent its charm. Up one step is a black iron grille work balustrade separating the living room from the studio dining room. This spacious, hospitable room opens to the hall through a square doorway.

The kitchen is lovely. It has rows of built-in cabinets and a two-way sink surrounded by black tile. It is equipped with gas stove and electrolux refrigerator.

Upstairs there are three bedrooms. One has a very large adjoining sleeping porch. The master bedroom has two large closets and has its own lavatory with shower room. The wallpaper in this bath is merry with red sail ships and tiny marine designs.

Designs on Bath Wall.

The main bath is modernistic and is done in a beautiful shade of green.

Unique burnt wood paneled walls and a corner fireplace accent the basement recreation room and a roomy closet. This recreation room adjoins the outside back porch. Every visitor will be charmed and delighted with this truly entrancing home.

On Waterside drive is a group of homes overlooking Rock Creek Park. These houses are just around the corner from Massachusetts avenue. The exhibit home is at 2553 Waterside drive. The homes are arranged in a semi-circle with front court, beautifully landscaped and dotted with shrubs and small trees. There are park vistas from every front window. The entrance lamps are old stage coach lanterns and other types of Colonial lanterns. They have been transformed into electric lamps and add greatly to the charm of these houses. The handmade bricks were taken from a house 150 years old. They have been sandblasted and are clean and bright. The front doorways of the homes are authentic reproductions of original Colonial doorways.

Colonial Atmosphere.

Over the threshold and into the gracious high ceilinged living room, I was surprised and delighted by the charm of its blue painted walls so closely resembling the old-time blue clay plaster walls often used in the earliest colonial houses. The baseboards are black and all hardware, (light fixtures, door knobs, letter slot, door knocker, etc.) are of finest brass. The feature of the room is an old-fashioned fireplace with black slate hearth. There is an arched alcove giving space for the lounge. It has every modern convenience such as indirect lighting, plenty of wall plugs, concealed radiation, etc. The house is beautifully furnished by P. J. Nee. One step up from the living room is the gracious studio dining room, with its French doors leading to the cocktail garden. This little garden is enclosed by spiked legs, reaching high and concealing the garden from outsiders.

In the kitchen gleaming white built-in cabinets are placed around the sink, table-top gas stoves, Electrolux and other equipment. Two walls are solid with these shining cabinets and equipment. There is a ventilator in the kitchen to keep the air clean and fresh.

Old English Staircase.

A basement recreation room has paneled walls and small old-fashioned lamps placed on little wall shelves.

An old English staircase leads to the second floor. Here the main bath is shining white with tub and shower enclosed by arched alcove. The feature of this bathroom is the huge recessed mirror. There are two bedrooms on this floor. The master bedroom has a wood-burning fireplace and is so spacious and inviting it may be used as a second-floor reception room.

On the third floor is a bedroom with light wallpaper and sloping walls, another bedroom is finished in blue wallpaper and beautifully furnished in gray.

All in all, these Georgian town houses are distinctive and charming and the answer to any home-hunter's prayer.

This home at 1615 Juniper street northwest, in Rock Creek Hills is located on a lot containing approximately 15,000 square feet of ground, numerous dogwood trees and bordered by a hemlock hedge. It is presented by the office of John F. Maury and J. Rupert Mohler, jr., Inc., realtors.

Color Used to Accent Natural Wood Finish

Furniture makers are giving chairs, tables and chests a new note by accenting their natural wood finishes with touches of color. A maple chair may have the edge of the seat and part of the back painted bright blue or Chinese red. With walnut or mahogany stain, soft blues and greens are used.

Layer of Turpentine Will Preserve Paints

Cans containing paint to be used again should be tightly covered between painting sessions. Before applying the lid tightly, however—and after placing the can where it will not be moved until time to use it again—a very thin layer of turpentine poured carefully over the top of the paint in the can will prevent a thick skin from forming on the surface of the paint. If such a skin does form, try to remove it all in one piece. Don't, through any mistaken idea of economy, stir the skin into the paint. This will only break up the skin into tiny particles which will roughen the surface of the paint.

White Damar Varnish Used to Protect Maps

To protect maps that have been mounted and hung on the wall, apply a coating of the palest varnish obtainable. White damar varnish will be most satisfactory and even this may be thinned with a very little turpentine to make it more transparent. Next to damar, any of the very pale copal varnishes made for interior surfaces could be used if well thinned. A fixatif lacquer, which can be purchased at your nearest artist's supply house, is also satisfactory. This can be sprayed on.

Oil Heating Plants Built for Harmony

Oil-burning heating units that include the burner unit and all its trappings within the unit itself been designed and are on the market. These heaters are compact and neat looking and are finished in enameled cases so that they may be set up in a finished room without objection.

The fire chamber in which the flame is enclosed has been especially designed to "fit" the flame; that is, the shape of the chamber follows the curve of the flame and thus the walls receive an even heat that gives a maximum of efficiency in imparting the heat to the water or air that surrounds the chamber.

If you need a new heating unit a loan may be made from a private institution and insured by the Federal Housing Administration under the modernization credit plan to install it.

Amateur Painters' Hint.

Amateur painters are often discouraged by finding after the job is finished that there are unpainted spots here and there on a chair or table. To avoid this, first turn the chair or table upside down on a newspaper, paint the legs and stretchers, then place it on its feet and finish the job. This gives two views of each piece and makes it much more unlikely that bare spaces will be left.

Red Is Accent Color.

Red's primary use is as an accent color, particularly in rooms that receive little sunlight. As such, it should be used sparingly and with neutral backgrounds.

FHA Aids Couple To Complete Home

Kansas City, Kans.—Determined to have a home of their own, Mr. and Mrs. Marshal Ehart of this city purchased a lot several years ago. On the back of this lot they built a small structure and moved in, saving every possible cent toward the building of a house.

Eventually they were able to dig the cellar. When this was finished they moved into it and planned to live there until they were able to add to the house. About this time the national housing act was passed and a short time later the single-mortgage system of the Federal Housing Administration went into effect.

As a result Mr. and Mrs. Ehart were able to obtain funds to complete their home and when it was completed the doors were thrown open to the first model home to be completed here. Hundreds of visitors have seen the house and as a result numerous applications for insured mortgages have been received by local banks.

Exhibit Home Offers Comfort In Facilities

Convenience Stressed in the Floor Plan of Calvert Realty Co. House.

Convenience and comfort are stressed in the upper floor arrangement of the new exhibit home at 3825 Calvert street northwest. This home is one of several new moderately priced homes recently completed by the Calvert Realty Co. at 3821-47 Calvert street northwest, and are now ready for occupancy at this convenient location. J. A. McKeever Co. are sales agents for the new Calvert street dwellings.

Particularly notable and commendable is the master bedroom in this new exhibit home. It is of spacious proportions, 11 by 17 feet, with large windows that allow plenty of sunshine to sweep through the room and corridor. Next to this master bedroom are two tile baths. One of these baths, a modern shower, connec directly with the master bedroom, while the second bath is closely adjacent. This latter bathroom has both tub and shower facilities.

The Julius Lansburgh Furniture Co. has made an unusually attractive job of furnishing this room and its pleasing interior is a delight to those who appreciate the full value of home decoration and arrangement. Visitors to these attractive new Calvert street homes are enthusiastic over the spacious dimensions of the master bedroom which has been gained by clever and practical arrangement of the upstairs design.

Policy Drafted By Real Estate Board Institute

Standards of Practice Are Made Mandatory on Member Firms.

Following continuous study since its formation two years ago, the Institute of Real Estate Management of the National Association of Real Estate Boards has adopted standards of practice mandatory on its member firms and has adopted a formal statement of further recommended policies.

The standards are of interest to all owners of income property. They follow:

Clients' funds shall be segregated from moneys belonging to the management firm and shall be kept in a separate bank or bank account under some such special designation as "Owners' Trust Fund," so that it is apparent that the moneys in this fund do not belong to the agent.

The segregated account or accounts of clients shall, at all times, contain 100 per cent of all funds belonging to the client or clients.

Clients' funds shall not be handled or accounted for by an officer or employe who is not bonded.

Monthly Check.

Unless the client instructs otherwise, in writing, the agent shall, within the first 10 days of each month, send him a check covering in full the balance in his account on the last day of the preceding month, together with a complete itemized statement of receipts and disbursements.

The managing agent shall have a specific understanding with each client as to fees and commissions for managing, renting and other services and these charges shall be shown clearly on the clients' monthly statement as items paid to the agent.

The agent shall accept no commissions, rebates, discounts, or other benefits from the management of a client's property other than those specifically agreed upon.

When the agent deducts cash discounts from bills or purchases, his statement to the owner concerned shall show only the disbursement of the net amount actually paid.

The agent shall not use advertising, which is inaccurate in any material particular or which misrepresents the agent's services, the clients' property, or is otherwise misleading.

The recommended policies are:

Before making any lease, written or verbal, a detailed application from the prospective tenant should be required and written references secured.

A management agent should purchase materials and supplies, contract for labor and material, and assume other obligations on behalf of a client, in the client's name and not in his own name.

All bills for disbursements of owners' funds should be approved by an officer or principal of the management agency.

Whether the relationship of the manager to the client is that of manager or contractor, the manager should be protected by workmen's compensation, public liability, and/or other insurance at the cost of the client.

If a client requires a fidelity bond the cost thereof should be borne by the client.

Unless otherwise agreed, the client should pay for all of the advertising of his property.

Services rendered by management agencies in connection with tax objections and reductions should be compensated for in addition to the regular management fee.

The manager should distinguish between business and legal advice, and should not assume the responsibility of attempting to give the client legal advice.

No member should advertise premises for rent with concessions or free rent.

No management agent should induce, or attempt to induce, the breach of an existing oral or written contract between a competitor and his client.

Laundry Benches Prevent Backache

Service, convenience, and comfort are the primary factors in good laundry-room equipment.

Most equipment is installed too low, causing housewives many backaches from stooping. A built-in bench at proper height will be found convenient and an effective place to install washers, ironers, etc. Tubs should be at such a height that the housewife does not have to stoop from the shoulders. Funds to equip or improve laundry rooms are obtainable from private financial institutions operating under the Federal Housing Administration's insured Modernization Credit Plan.

FHA Lending Up in Last Six Months of Year

100% Increase Recorded as Compared With First Half Year.

Financial institutions throughout the country lending insurable funds under the National Housing Act recorded $508,082,909 of business during the year to advance the total since the operation of the act in August, 1934, to $538,862,732. The latter half of 1935 showed an increase of more than 100 per cent in the volume of business over the first half.

The quarterly totals in 1935 for both modernization and repair notes insured and mortgages selected for appraisal are: January, February and March, $35,722,226; April, May and June, $115,491,060; July, August and September, $167,986,593, and October, November and December, $161,852,886. Low-cost housing mortgages accepted for insurance totaled $27,030,234. The total for five months of 1934 was $30,579,733.

The third quarter of 1935, because it included the peak building months, remains the highest total. The final quarter, when building operations may logically be expected to be substantially curtailed, held to a surprising volume, according to Stewart McDonald, Federal Housing Administrator.

The third quarter of 1935 saw the year's record for mortgages selected for appraisal with a total of $92,258,816. But an unexpected national effort in modernization and repair work late in the year accounted for a record in modernization and repair notes insured in the final quarter with a total of $86,355,875.

The quarterly figures reflect some of the difficulties that attended the operation of the National Housing Act early in 1935. The need for enabling legislation in all of the states kept a check on the lending operations of many banks. However, by early summer the legislatures of 44 States had amended laws governing the practice of mortgage lending and the second quarter's figures show the extent of assistance given to the housing act by the States themselves.

Most notable, perhaps, is the volume of business in the final quarter of last year in a season not ordinarily distinguished by continued building operations. While the selection of mortgages for appraisal held to the unexpected high level of $75,497,011 for the three month period, modernization notes reached a record for the year and are continuing at peak momentum thus far in January.

While the total of low cost housing showed no startling gains near the end of the year, McDonald pointed out that at the present time projects totaling more than $86,000,000 are under review.

Somewhat strict regulations govern the aproval of low cost housing projects, McDonald said. The Federal Housing Administration determines, first, the need of such a project on the site proposed; second, the soundness of the financing plan; third, the rent schedule which must be low enough to meet the requirements of the groups for which these projects are erected. Above all, the Federal Housing Administration maintains a rigid scale of property standards in connection with low cost housing projects.

Trunk Room in Cellar Solves Huge Problem

Keeping trunks and bags away from dust and dirt, but in a convenient place is always a problem. When a trip looms unexpectedly how proud is the housewife, who with a minimum of effort can produce the required baggage.

A trunk room in the cellar solves the problem. A small dry space is all that is necessary. It should be completely enclosed to prevent dust and ashes from settling in the bags. Shelves may be built to hold small bags and a platform raised from the floor for trunks and large pieces.

'Paint Up Now And Pay Later' In Latest Offer

Industry Acts to Help Owners Save Their Homes From Neglect.

It's a new plan in the paint industry. Now you can have your home, your store, your office or income property painted as soon as the need appears—and pay for it in easy installments as you get paid.

Ernest T. Trigg, president of the National Paint, Varnish & Lacquer Association, refers to the plan as the "breaking of the bottle neck."

"Up until quite recently," he said, "it was necessary for people to save up enough money to pay cash for a paint job. And comparatively few of them got around to accumulating the necessary reserve in their bank accounts—as is witnessed by the millions of homes which have gone unpainted.

"Now, through the deferred payment plan, these legions of homes can have the protection they need so badly. The property owner can arrange through his painter or paint dealer to have the work done immediately. No down payment is required, unless the owner wishes to make one, and the payments may be made over as long as 18 months.

"The millions of home owners who have their life savings invested in their homes will welcome this convenient way to protect the property they have worked so hard to gain. Only too well they are realizing that paint-thirsty homes are in great danger—that they are about to be taken away from them—not by foreclosure of mortgage, but by that surer route—neglect.

"To neglect to keep your investment protected with paint is as serious as letting your insurance policy lapse—as important as keeping up the interest or payments on the mortgage. Your painter is the best friend your house has.

"Paint keeps out moisture—that Enemy No. 1 of wood and metal. It forms a wear-resisting, waterproof coat which lengthens the life of wood or metal many-fold. Without proper paint protection, metal rusts and disintegrates, wood rots and allows moisture to do costly damage to home interiors. Moisture, seeping through paintless surfaces, increases heating costs and makes homes damp and unhealthful. It is far cheaper to repaint when the first need for it appears."

Institute Makes Plea for Beauty In Architecture

Utilitarian Purposes Declared Not the Only Consideration in Building.

An appeal for beauty in architecture is made by the committee on education of the American Institute of Architects, of which Dean William Emerson of the School of Architecture of Massachusetts Institute of Technology is chairman.

"In view of the prevalent preoccupation with function rather than design, and the tendency to regard composition as little more than the assembling of pre-fabricated units, the committee believes that the time has come to make an appeal for beauty in our architecture—for the expression of something more in the exterior of a building than the mere portrayal in diagrammatic form of the structure as shown in plan," Emerson explained.

"With full recognition of the research and reasoning so logically expressed in plan and structure, we believe that something more is needed, something beyond the purely utilitarian, that might be called either charm or beauty, but without which our creations fail to realize their full possibilities. Our appeal is that this is worth striving for, and that it is more likely to be embodied in our architecture when we recognize our debt to the past and the value of its lessons in meeting the problem of today."

Other members of the committee are Charles Butler, New York; Dean Everett V. Meeks, of Yale University; C. C. Zantzinger and William Pope Barney, of Philadelphia; Henry Richardson Shepley, of Boston; George C. Nimmons, of Chicago; Louis La Beaume, of St. Louis, and Ellis F. Lawrence, of Portland, Oreg.

Colored Bread Boards.

Enameling a gay edging of color on a wooden bread board makes it an attractive addition to the dinner table when a buffet lunch or an informal after-theater supper is being served.

U. S. Leads in Paints.

In the United States the production of chemical colors, paints, varnishes, lacquers and other products of a similar nature greatly exceeds in quantity and quality the production of any other nation in the world. In the American paint industry there are over 2,000 research workers, constantly seeking to better the industry's products.

Tulsa Realtors Plan Displays For Convention

Photos and Cost Data Feature South Central Meeting February 12-13.

A study display of realtor-built houses, built and sold in 1935 and to date, to include photographs and floor plans of the houses, their selling prices and data on materials used, will be a feature of the coming South Central convention of realtors to be held at Tulsa, February 12 and 13, under joint auspices of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, the State real estate associations of the region and the host real estate board.

Carl M. Knapp, of the River Oaks Corporation, Houston, Tex., president of the Houston Real Estate Board, is chairman of the committee arranging this exhibit. Also planned for study at the convention are two other displays, an exhibit of real estate advertising and an exhibit of transaction forms, including standard forms developed by the national association and a notable collection of forms in use in leading real estate offices of the country as collected in the library of the association.

The Kansas Association of Real Estate Boards will hold its annual business meeting in Tulsa in connection with the South Central convention, which will draw delegates from eight States, Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, New Mexico. The Kansas meeting will be a dinner meeting on February 12. Plans for meetings of other State groups are under way.

Notables to Speak.

Notable additions to the list of speakers already announced are the following:

Clarence M. Turley, St. Louis, president of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers and active in the St. Louis Real Estate Exchange, will address the opening general sessions, February 12.

Charles W. Thompson, Lieutenant Governor of Kansas and chairman of the tax committee of the United States Building and Loan League, will address a regional luncheon meeting of the association's national committee on real estate taxation, to be held February 12.

W. E. Wood, New Orleans, assistant supervisor of Homestead and Building and Loan Associations of the Louisiana State banking department, who had a large part in making successful the notable agreement between the New Orleans Real Estate Exchange and the New Orleans Homestead Clearing House Association formed to stabilize the market and get back into user ownership approximately $27,000,000 to $30,000,000 of properties in the hands of building and loan associations of the city, will address the sessions of February 13. He will describe the whole plan used, which included pricing the properties on the basis of potential income, listing them exclusively with members of the New Orleans Real Estate Exchange, and opening a market for homestead (building and loan) stock in the hands of would-be home purchasers.

Interesting Topics.

New building materials will be discussed by J. Harold Hawkins, of McCall's Magazine, which, beginning in the April issue, will publish complete details of the Home of the Month, selected each month by a committee of the land developers and home builders division of the association on the basis of livability.

"Militant Merchandising" will be the subject of H. C. Brady, Wichita, Kans., immediate past president of the Wichita Real Estate Board.

"Making a Rental Business Pay" will be discussed by W. V. Richmond, Kansas City, Mo.

Clyde King, Tulsa, Okla., immediate past president of the Tulsa board, will talk on the influence of appraising on the mortgage business.

Howard H. Haylett, business manager of the Chicago Real Estate Board, will be a speaker at the luncheon round-table of real estate board and State association executives, to be held on February 13.

Real estate boards, represented by chosen members, will compete for a trophy to be awarded the board presenting the best record of what its town has done to protect real estate ownership.

The New Orleans Real Estate Exchange has arranged for three special cars to convey the Louisiana delegation to the convention.

Inclosed Sink Aids KitchenRenovation

A streamlined kitchen will arouse envy in the heart of 9 out of 10 women, but not all of these will feel that they can do more to their own kitchens than buy a yard or two of new chintz or oilcloth.

Even with the modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration making it simple to obtain funds for home improvements, some housewives will feel that they would rather spend money on other changes and to content with the simple renovation of their kitchen.

An inclosed sink will do much to give a stream-lined effect to an ordinary kitchen. Ungainly pipes can be hidden from view and storage space for cleansers, cloths and other accessories arranged.

Walks Add to Beauty.

A flagstone or molded concrete slab walk leading from the sidewalk to the entrance door of a home not only adds to the general beauty of the landscaping, but in winter months provides a safe, comparatively dry method of access to the home. Such walks are easily kept clean and help to prevent the much-feared colds and other maladies that come with winter. These walks are easily laid and will add beauty to any home.

Moriss Firm Entertain 200 Dealers Here

Profitable Year Seen for Electric Refrigerator Sales in Capital.

The Edgar Morris Sales Co. entertained more than 200 local Westinghouse refrigerator dealers at a dinner-meeting Wednesday night at the Willard Hotel. The meeting was also attended by officials of the Electric Institute of Washington, department stores, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. and Westinghouse Electric Supply Co.

The Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. brought from the factory in Mansfield, Ohio, a crew of eight men with a five-ton truck of stage and display equipment, including special lighting effects, sound and technicolor moving pictures.

The principal speakers were Edgar Morris, John F. Myers, manager, Westinghouse Electric Supply Co.; R. C. Cosgrove, manager, Household Refrigeration Sales, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., and E. M. Blanes, district merchandise manager, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co.

Edgar Morris stated that present business conditions are so favorable in Washington that 1936 should be a profitable year for all merchants.

R. C. Cosgrove presented the 1936 "Golden Jubilee" line of Westinghouse refrigerators, shown here for the first time. He predicted more electric refrigerators would be sold during 1936 than were sold during four years prior to the depression.

The advertising department of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. announced that the company had the largest merchandise advertising budget in 1936 since it entered the appliance business and that this budget was increased to tie in with the Westinghouse Golden Jubilee.

Concrete Useful In Home Repairs

The uses about the place to which concrete may be put are many. Walks, pools, steps, porches, platforms, railings, bird baths, bins, and innumerable others are described in several interesting bulletins and pamphlets.

Concrete, being in fluid form, when placed, can be molded to any shape or size with comparative ease; the most difficult part about its use is the making of the forms in which it must be poured. These forms may be made of planks or certain kinds of impregnated fiber boards or laminated sheets, braced to keep them true and straight, while the pouring and setting is going on. The forms should be carefully made for the final result will depend largely upon them.

The mixture of the concrete will vary for different uses to which it will be put, so follow closely the mixtures prescribed. Use care in measuring the ingredients and mix them well before adding the water. Use only enough pure water to make the mass into a jellylike consistency, and use the concrete as soon as it is mixed.

In-a-Door Beds Aid To Nursery Space

In-a-door beds generally have been considered the prerogative of bachelor girls or young men who live in one-room apartments. One enterprising young mother, however, adapted the idea to the nursery.

Two little boys who shared the room had many games to play, while, with two beds in the room, there was little space left. Wall beds which folded up and were completely out of the way in the daytime, were installed. The doors which hid them were painted a pastel color and animals were drawn on the panels.

Closets for folding beds may be built and similar changes made to the nursery with very little effort and these changes will add a great deal to the play happiness of the little folks in the house when crowded for space in which to enjoy their fun and games.

Splash Blocks Useful.

Lots of water will pass down the leaders between now and spring, and if it is allowed to pour right onto the lawn or into the flower beds there will be little lawn and few flowers next summer. If you can, connect the leaders with some drain or dry well; if you can not, put concrete splash blocks under them so the water will be spread and will not cut out gullies.

'Hidden' Value Is Vital Factor In New Home

Background, Taste and Integrity of Builder Play Important Roles.

By Horace Browning,
Sales Manager for A. S. Gardiner.

In the purchase of a home unquestionably the most important factor that influences the buyer is the atmosphere surrounding the neighborhood. The interesting thing about this attribute is that it has no actual monetary value, but is a product of the imagination of the builder combined with his own background of taste and discrimination. Some houses have no intangible or hidden values. You have seen many. Others have them in greater or less degree. These are the ones that have an appeal to the home seeker over and above the actual intrinsic values based on the amount of labor, material, etc., that went into the making of them.

It is generally a fact that the completed building reflects the character and purpose of its builder. Even if the architect's plan is so outstanding as to almost overbalance the other factors, the sincerity and purpose of the builder is made known by the manner in which he has grasped and endeavored to carry out that plan so that the planning and execution reach that utmost degree of perfection, which is so difficult of achievement, but once achieved is readily recognized by those kindred spirits, whose own sense of taste and discrimination appreciate the care and understanding necessary to such accomplishment. These are the reasons why you know you want one house and would not have another if it were given to you.

Integrity Vital.

In the building of homes, the most important element is undoubtedly the integrity of the builder. This is more important in a home than in a lot of other things as it is difficult after a home is completed to see the hidden values which have so much to do with the comfort and economy of living in the home. If the purpose behind the building is the pride and joy in creative accomplishment then the buyer can be assured of the integrity of the building itself. If, however, your knowledge of human nature makes you believe that profit alone is the compelling reason behind the building of the house then caution should be the invisible counsellor and a more thorough appraisement made of the intrinsic value.

There will be a lot of people engaging in the building of houses over the next few years. Some may do so because of the opportunity for profit alone. If you do not know what good construction calls for then it may be to your best interest to consult with someone in whom you have confidence or pay an experienced and competent man for his opinion as to its soundness and worth. Money spent in this manner will probably pay better dividends than any investment you have ever made. The saving of a few hundred dollars by the builder where it may not be noticed by the casual observer may add tremendously to the cost of living in the home through increased charges for heating, replacements, etc., as well as lessening the comfort the buyer may have reason to expect.

Then again, some well-meaning and sincere, but inexperienced, builder may do things that appear to him to be good, but practical experience may prove them not to be of real value and a drawback to comfort and economy.

Test of Time.

The experienced builder does not jump at innovations. He is satisfied to wait until they have proven themselves before he is willing to use them. The reason for this, as will be realized, is that he has not only a reputation to uphold, but must also conserve his assets. He knows, too, that when a family starts out to buy a home, they have become a conservative as they can, because buying a home is about the biggest single thing they do and new ideas in construction and planning must submit to a severe test.

The home built without integrity is very much like the life of a person in which it is lacking. It has no character and becomes a continual disappointment. Let character and integrity be the foundation upon which the home is built and the atmosphere which surrounds it will make it stand out among its kind for generations.

Housing Aid Lists Five Aims In City Planning

Flexible Rather Than Rigid Expansion Program Sought for Future.

Because "cities, like living beings, have rickets" and cannot stand violent distortions or dislocations, city planning must ultimately come to check the wasteful development of existing services and utilities and to make possible economical municipal administration.

This is the opinion of Miles L. Colean, director, large scale housing and technical division of the Federal Housing Administration, in a recent discussion on community planning as it relates to mortgage insurance.

Colean advanced five endeavors which he considered vital to the well-being of cities and their populations. They are:

The reconsideration of the elements which make up the city; the amount and character of its industry; the extent of its commercial enterprise, with the probable growth and direction of growth of these; the distribution of residential areas, with especial consideration to the requirements of the various economic groups, to density, to recreational facilities, and to the possibilities of special treatment for outstanding sites.

The reconsideration of zoning ordinances based upon the above, and the relating of zoning to practical possibilities.

The development of comprehensive traffic systems which will allow for swift-moving through-travel, which will outline neighborhoods and discourage the intrusion into them of unnecessary traffic and which will provide for ample automobile parking in areas of business and dense residential use.

The co-ordinated planning of undeveloped, outlying areas destined for future urban use and the development of the means of control of these areas.

The co-ordinated replanning of areas blighted by deterioration or speculative selling.

"Planning," he said, "which produces straitjackets has defeated its purpose. Real estate subjected to restraints which stifle normal expansions must suffer as great contortions as when it is allowed to suffer from too loose or too little planning. The rigidity of many plans laid down for too long a time in the future and the tendency to require indefinite extension of the inflexible gridiron as is now the case in many metropolitan areas, are cases in point, where planning has actually aided in destroying the type of stability vital to cities."

"There is not a city in the country for which such a program as I have outlined is not needed. It would prevent loss of value in real estate and at the same time create confidence among, and provide comfort, safety and health for urban dwellers."

To protect real estate values, he added, and to support the vast industry of building and selling houses, the Housing Administration wishes to see the insured mortgage widely adopted and the insurance cost reduced to a minimum. As long as the risk remains in the mortgage business, he said, the cost must be absorbed and to achieve a lowering of the cost of insurance, the Housing Administration seeks the assistance of every force which may serve to eliminate risk.

Writer Asserts Homes Are Starved for Color

According to Carl Bretz, writer, countless homes are suffering from an ailment he calls "color starvation." He recommends the introduction of such colors as: The various blue-green shades, crisp cherry red, dark rich brown like moist earthen mould, fawn and chartreuse. As a color scheme for a room, he suggests "various shades of brown, enlivened with clear yellow, a deep green and a brilliant one, and white."

A new wall effect evolved by the modern painter is a stucco produced by thick paint applied with a spray gun. Two-tone combinations suggest a textured surface and allow pleasing gradations of color.

Industry Holds Steady Against Diverse Trends

Freight Traffic, Steel Activity Are Among Favorable Factors.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 18.—The Associated Press index of industrial activity was unchanged this week at 83.8, as divergent trends appeared on the industrial horizon.

Automobile production, cotton manufacturing activity, and electric power output seasonally adjusted indices fell back slightly. Residential building was unchanged from the previous week.

Reflecting a sharp pick-up in the miscellaneous and less-than-carlot merchandise shipments, car loadings advanced substantially more than the seasonal expectancy. Steel mill activity continued to gain fractionally.

The index, adjusted for seasonal variation, with 1929-30 as 100, and the adjusted components, follows:

	Latest Week	Prev. Week	Year Ago
Composite index	83.8	83.8	76.1
Automobile production	102.2	102.6	90.5
Steel mill activity	86.3	86.0	65.6
Cotton mfg. activity	106.5	106.7	91.4
Electric power prod.	106.6	106.5	94.4
Residential building	43.2	43.2	18.0
Total carloadings	86.3	87.7	81.5

Cotton Missionaries Going to Argentina

Buenos Aires, Jan. 18 (AP).—Argentina, which recently made plans to settle ten North American cotton-farming families in the Chaco territory, has increased cotton acreage 70 per cent over last year to a new record of 800,000 acres.

This was announced by the national cotton board shortly after Gov. Jose Castells, of the Chaco, had returned from a trip through the American cotton belt, where he made tentative arrangements to bring ten Texas and Mississippi cotton families to Argentina in 1936. The Americans, under the plan, will be used as "missionaries" to show Argentine farmers how to grow cotton properly.

Glidden Holder Sues Officers For $4,450,000

Woman Cites Options, Salaries and Bonuses of 6 Officials.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Jan. 18.—Catherine D. Boyle, of Woburn, Mass., filed suit in Common Pleas Court today to recover for the benefit of all stockholders $4,450,000 from six officers of the Glidden Co., paint and varnish firm, in which she claims to hold 300 shares of common stock.

Her petition said the amount represents the difference between the price paid by the officials for 81,000 shares of Glidden stock, purchased in 1932 and 1933, and its present market price. It also includes, the petition noted, $425,000 in salaries paid the officials in 1932, 1933 and 1934 and bonuses for the same period, amounting to from $200,000 to $300,000.

The petition alleged the Glidden board of directors, of which the defendants were members, authorized the six to take options January 21, 1932, on 35,000 shares of the concern's common stock at $8 a share. It also said the six took options last July on 46,000 shares at $22 a share and that both options were exercised. Glidden common closed yesterday at $51.25 a share.

The plaintiff claimed the defendants voted dividends for themselves and took a bonus of 5 per cent of the company's net earnings for 1931. The suit asks an injunction to restrain the defendants from disposing of any of the stock in question pending conclusion of the court action.

Foreign Exchange.

By the Associated Press.

Guilders at 68.99 cents, and Swiss francs at 23.04 cents, were each .04 of a cent better in New York.

The pound sterling eased ¼ of a cent in New York at $4.95⅝, while in London, before the American opening, the dollar improved to 4.96⅛ to the pound.

Stock Prices Tend Downward As Aggressive Buying Abates

Average Decline Is 0.3 Per Cent; Trading Pace Is Brisk With Volume Exceeding a Million Shares; Bonds Lower.

By Frank MacMillen,
Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Jan. 18.—Stock prices nosed downward today throughout the short session. Acute pressure was absent, but week-end evening up and the lack of important bidding in a number of the recently active groups induced a general sag in the list.

Stocks changed hands at a fairly brisk rate for the two-hour trading period. Turnover in the stock exchange totaled 1,072,791 shares.

A decline of .3 of a point was registered by the Associated Press average of 60 stocks, at 57.3. The industrials, rails and utilities used in the compilation declined about equally.

Beside the power and carrier issues, motors, steels and mines appeared rather friendless during the whole session.

Many of the so-called pivotal shares, and some of the equities which have been well taken in recent sessions, dropped back fractions to a point or so.

Bonds, too, failed to attract a buying following. Most corporate loans were rather heavy. The majority of U. S. Government obligations worked a little lower.

Leading commodities moved with sufficient circumspection to offer no pronounced influence on securities markets. Cotton ended down 15 to 50 cents a bale. At Chicago, wheat futures were unchanged to ¼ of a cent a bushel higher, while corn advanced ⅛ to ½ cent.

In addition to the restrictive influences generated by nearby action on important Washington legislation, the market had to contend with a death of news stimulus.

Detroit advices indicated some hesitancy in motor production schedules for the coming week, confirming some Wall street traders in their recent attitude of caution toward auto shares.

The possibility of a decision Monday by the Supreme Court in the TVA case brought no buying into the utility shares as it had on previous occasions recently.

Most of the leaders in the group lost major fractions by the finish. A good many followers of the power stocks thought the court's pronouncement might be held over for another week or two.

Profit taking was in evidence in the oils, a carry-over of the trend which began in this division several days ago. Miles were still in the process of adjusting themselves to Friday's 3-cent cut in the price of bar silver.

Among the losers of a point or so scattered through the list were Nickel at 48¾, American Can at 130, Santa Fe at 67¾, U. S. Smelting at 89¼, Cerro de Pasco at 49½, Amerada at 82, and Greyhound at 71⅛.

Others down somewhat less included Bethlehem, Southern Pacific, Public Service of New Jersey, Chrysler, Standard Oil of California, General Motors, North American, Pennsylvania, Radio and Sears Roebuck. Small gains were scored by American Telephone at 160¼, Westinghouse Electric at 101⅜, Phillips at 40⅝ and American Tobacco "B" at 100½.

Curb Prices Lag Under Realizing

New York, Jan. 18 (AP).—Lower price tendencies predominated on the curb market today. An assortment of utilities, oils and industrials slipped back small fractions to around a point under light offerings that represented a sizable amount of week-end profit-taking. A few specialties were in demand at higher levels.

Losers included American Gas, Electric Bond & Share, Sunshine Mining, Technicolor, United Light & Power and Wayne Pump. Childs Co. preferred and Colts Patent Firearms were conspicuous strong spots. The former has been moving up consistently in recent sessions coincident with reports of better earnings. Transfers of 409,000 shares compared with 439,000 last Saturday.

Danger of War Now Is Remote, Scholar Holds

Precedents of History Minimize Its Peril, Says Dr. Usher.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, Jan. 18.—A history professor who accurately forecast the World War says there is no immediate danger of another major conflict.

Dr. Roland G. Usher, head of the department of history at Washington University, in 1913 published "Pan-Germanism," a book which foretold the outbreak of the last great war.

Today, after weiging the factors disturbing the peace of the world, Dr. Usher predicted it would be several decades at least before another large-scale war would burst.

His prophecy is based on the precedents of the past and belief that there is no general issue at stake important enough to foment world-wide war.

History Cited.

"The great wars in the past have come once a century," he said. "The world was shaken with war from 1618 to 1648, from 1702 to 1713, from 1793 to 1815 and from 1914 to 1918. This is one argument history affords that wars of magnitude do not tread upon each other's heels.

"Every war of any consequence leaves lots of minor issues unsettled, and these are sources of contention between individual countries for a generation or more after the major issue has been decided.

"Today there are plenty of small issues to vex nations, but the great fundamental issue is lacking to set off the spark of universal conflict."

The historian said the world can look "quite confidently to several decades of peace before another general war."

New Issue Held Needed.

"It is always feared that the little wars following a major war will reopen the general issue," Dr. Usher said, "but for three centuries they haven't. The next great war grows out of a new issue."

A further reason for believing general war is not imminent, he said, is that no coalitions of approximately equal power exist.

"No one country can assail the whole of Europe," he explained. "In 1934 Great Britain, France, Italy and Russia agreed mutually to oppose German aggression. Even if Germany is re-armed she can hardly attempt to move against these great powers.

"There is little possibility of Italy's present Abyssinian campaign spreading war through the Mediterranean, because Mussolini has thereby isolated his country from the support of France, England and the smaller powers."

Dr. Usher pointed out that even if Italy and Germany should unite, their geographical separation would largely nullify the military value of the alliance.

Taster of Tea Says He's Ready For 1936 Tests

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 18.—Charles F. Hutchinson, chief Government tea examiner at New York, is sipping tea pretty frantically these days in preparation for the annual meeting of the U. S. Board of Tea Experts February 3.

On that date the seven men of the board, including Hutchison, will station themselves at a revolving table and sip anonymous cups of tea until their palates reach an agreement on which tea is a fair standard by which the Government can test imports during the next year.

The Poorest Quality.

The standard tea, Hutchinson explained, is selected as the poorest which the board feels the Government may allow the housewife to buy.

Whereas the other six members of the board are called upon to sip contesting teas only once a year, Hutchinson spends all year, day in and day out, swishing tea around his molars.

He gradually narrows the field of teas down to only a few dozen, from which the board selects the standards for each of the ten groups of tea the Government recognizes.

Mr. Hutchinson, a cheery fellow, guesses he sips over a hundred cups of tea daily. He doesn't swallow any, though, just tastes.

Smells—Doesn't Swallow.

"A lot of tea," he says, "I can tell just by the smell. If it smells all right, I know it will taste all right, but if it doesn't smell up to snuff then I taste it to make sure."

When he sips, he's pretty noisy about it, explaining that he doesn't have time to enjoy the amenities of the tea table in his laboratory.

He's been sipping teas for some 20 years, and thinks his job one of the most enjoyable there is.

"The beauty of it is," he said, "that no matter what my decision on a tea may be, the tea trade asked for it. The trade got the tea act passed in 1897 to protect itself, now it abides by the decisions.

Board of Appeals.

"If I decide a tea isn't up to standard, the importer appeals it to the board of tea appeals, composed of three tasters selected from the tea trade. They can overrule me, but so far my batting average has been pretty good."

But the tea importers are pretty fair about things, he said. For instance, last year there was only .277 of 1 per cent of tea submitted which was rejected. And there were some 100,000,000 pounds admitted to this country.

Clogged Gutters Result in Leaks

Clogged gutters cause water to back up under the shingles past the metal flashing and leaks result.

Now that the leaves are off the trees, gutters should be cleaned of all accumulated dirt and rubbish so that rain water may pass freely down the leaders.

Besides, clogged gutters will freeze and often burst the metal and cause considerable damage. While cleaning the gutters look for possible cracks and repair any you may find.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

Harris & Ewing.

This quintet of Federal charm and pulchritude is in charge of arrangements for the President's birthday ball to be given by the Young Democratic Clubs of America, District of Columbia Division, at the Willard Hotel Wednesday night from 10 to 2. Left to right are Sylvia Walker, FHA, chairman of the District Affairs committee; Freda Hootman, FHA, member of ticket committee; Betty Gray, WPA, corresponding secretary; Lena Belle High, AAA, general chairman, and Lindon Hargis, FHA, member of reception committee.

AN interesting document is the annual report to Congress of A. E. Giegengack, Public Printer, which was issued this month. This report covers the work of the G. P. O. for the first full year of Giegengack's administration.

BAKER.

Matters directly affecting the personnel occupy a major part of the report and some of these are worthy of renumeration:

A net increase of 48 employes was made during the year ended June 30, 1935, to handle the tremendous increase in quantity of work in all sections of the Office, as well as to reduce overtime and spread employment, says the Printer. The total number on the rolls at the close of the year was 5,341. Fifty-eight employes were retired during the period.

A study was made during the year of the numerous welfare organizations existing in the Office, with special reference to sick and death-benefit associations and Christmas savings clubs, with the result that through consolidations 22 sick-benefit associations were reduced to a total of 8, and 5 death-benefit associations to 2.

On May 1, 1935, a group hospitalization insurance plan for G. P. O. employes was inaugurated, with now about 700 affiliated. The Government Printing Office Federal Credit Union, which now has more than 1,300 members, was organized in June, 1934.

In July, 1934, a new American Legion post was organized in the office and the Public Printer is a charter member. This post, No. 33, has a membership of over 400 and has a fully uniformed band of 38 pieces.

During the year two Federal employes' lodges were organized, both of the AFGE. These had a total membership of 141.

Other health and welfare projects of the GPO workers reported upon include the Emergency Hospital of the Government Printing Office which gave a total of 18,531 treatments and 1,970 physical examinations; group life insurance; and the Cafeteria and Recreation Association, a purely employee organization that owns and operates the G. P. O. cafeteria, bowling alleys, and a cigar stand.

E. F. Klinge (C), was elected president of the Patent Office Society last week. Other officers chosen with Mr. Klinge are V. I. Richard, vice president; Miss E. L. Morse (P), secretary; G. C. Pidgeon, treasurer.

SIX employes with long service records will be retired at Government Printing Office January 31, according to H. H. Wright, chief clerk. With addresses, titles and length of service, they are:

N. F. F. E. Activities.

The January meeting of the Educational Forum of the D. C. Federation of Federal Employes unions headlines the program of N. F. F. E. local unions this week. The first meeting of the Forum in its eighth year will witness the launching Friday evening of an extended study and discussion of the personnel phase of the civil service.

Volunteer members of the D. C. Federation of Federal Employes unions for the past month have been preparing a panel on the first topic to be presented: "The Report of the Committee of Inquiry on Government Personnel." Future discussions of a career service, programs for education and advancement of Government workers, a minimum wage in the Federal service, etc., will be participated in by the membership of the D. C. Federation at subsequent sessions of the Forum.

Dr. Franklin Meyer, Bureau of Standards, will preside at Friday's meeting of the Forum to which all Government workers are cordially invited. Open discussion from the floor will be the order after the topic of the evening is presented. The session starts at 8 o'clock at the local auditorium of the National Federation of Federal Employes unions, 710 Fourteenth street northwest.

Other N. F. F. E. units meeting this week are:

Tomorrow—Hospital Guild, Local No. 2, and General Accounting Office Credit Union. Officers will be elected at the annual meeting of Local No. 2's Hospital Guild, to which subscribers and prospective members are invited.

Tuesday—General Accounting Office Branch, Local No. 2, and at noon, Civil Service Commission Branch, Local No. 2, at the Commission.

Wednesday—Agricultural Department Branch, Local No. 2, and at the Southeast Library, Seventh street and Pennsylvania avenue, the Navy Yard Union, No. 250.

Thursday — Mechanics Branch, Local No. 2.

Friday—Executive Council, Local No. 2, at 5 p. m., in addition to the Educational Forum of the D. C. Federation of Federal Employes unions.

Unless otherwise designated, all meetings convene at 8 p. m. at the local N. F. F. E. auditorium, 710 Fourteenth street northwest.

Corrington G. Gill, assistant administrator of the Works Progress Administration, has been elected to membership in the American Society of Municipal Engineers and the International Association of Public Work Officials, it has been announced at Chicago by the joint secretariat of the two societies.

Declared Unconstitutional.

On the sixth of January in thirty-six,
The triple A was in a terrible fix.
For six old men who sat on a bench
Gummed up the works with a monkey wrench.
The House and the Senate had passed some laws,
Which six old men, just by moving their jaws,
Destroyed and declared unconstitutional.

Unconstitutional, said they, voicing mighty opinions,
We cannot pay farmers with hundreds of millions.
We cannot make one person pay through the nose,
While we are paying another for not planting his rows.
And so the farmer loses most helpful laws,
Which six old men, just by moving their jaws,
Destroyed and declared unconstitutional.

ALFRED S. KURTZ (P),
Audit Section AAA.

Entomology Has Big Year.

Lee A. Strong, chief of the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarentine, says that a new record was set last year by the bureau in scouting wider and wilder territory for destructive insect pests and plant diseases, as well as in destroying plants that carry over disease spores from one season to another. Emergency allotments of men and money made it possible to push forward these activities. Some of the important work done during the year is especially noteworthy:

Notable progress in control of the gypsy moth, the Japanese beetle and the Mexican fruit fly.

Progress in eradication of wild cotton in southern Florida, a job started four years ago to prevent the spread of the pink bollworm to the cotton belt.

Widespread campaigns against plant diseases, aided by the PWA and CCC.

Intense scouting in the tri-State area around New York City for trees infected with the Dutch elm disease.

Continued activity in the South against the phony peach disease and the citrus canker.

Roland McKee, senior agronomist, Division of Forage Crops and Diseases, Plant Industry, is the author of a circular on "Vernalization Experiments With Forage Crops." Another bulletin just issued by Agriculture is "Explosibility of Agricultural and Other Dusts as Indicated by Maximum Pressure and Rates of Pressure Rise," by Paul W. Edwards, associate engineer, and L. R. Leinbach, assistant chemist, Bureau of Chemistry and Soils.

Dr. Humphreys Retained.

Dr. William J. Humphreys, meteorological physicist of the Weather Bureau, who retired December 31 after 30 years of active service, has become a collaborator of the bureau, and he will now devote his time to research and writing.

Dr. Humphreys entered the Weather Bureau on July 1, 1905, as meteorological physicist. Until June 30, 1908, he was supervising director of the Mount Weather, Va., meteorological research observatory. Since then he has served continuously at the central office in Washington. For the past four years he has edited the Monthly Weather Review, but this work has now been taken over by his assistant, Dr. E. W. Woolard. Dr. Woolard also will continue his original investigations on dynamics of the atmosphere and related studies.

Several books—notably "Physics of the Air," "Weather Proverbs and Paradoxes," and "Rainmaking and Other Weather Vagaries"—and many papers on meteorology and physics have given Dr. Humphreys an international reputation. He received the preliminary training for his unusual position as a physicist of the air at Washington and Lee University, the University of Virginia and Johns Hopkins University. At the last named institution, in 1897, he received his Ph.D. degree.

Dr. Humphreys is a native of West Virginia. He will celebrate his seventy-fourth birthday February 3.

A rather new kind of farming—with fertilizer applied to the air instead of the soil—has been tried on a small scale at the Smithsonian Institution with marked success. Wheat plants were grown by Dr. Earl S. Johnston, of the division of radiation and organisms, in atmosphere containing about four times the amount of carbon dioxide found in normal air.

TWO Federal specialists write in the current number of the Yale Review:

Leonard D. White, United States Civil Service Commissioner, analyzes the present set-up in the Government service in an article entitled, "Can We Improve the Public Service?"

Sumner H. Slichter, formerly on the staff of Brookings Institution and now a member of the advisory committee on railroad employment to the Federal co-ordinator of transportation, writes on "Labor and the Government."

Anson L. Bodwell, 2418 North Capitol street, proofreader; 34 years.

William E. Gibson, 116 W street northwest, bindery operative, grade two, 20 years.

Joseph R. Lehmann, 622 Rock Creek Church road northwest, proofreader; 29 years.

Mrs. Annie G. L. Spencer, 1228 I street northwest, bindery operative, grade two, 27 years.

George M. Thorn, 1106 Horton street, Silver Spring, Md., guard, 15 years.

Horace B. Ware, 1835 California street northwest, proofreader, 29 years.

Harry A. Curtis (F), Tennessee Valley Authority, has invented an apparatus for making phosphoric acid by the combined oxidation and hydration of elemental phosphorus.

Attendant Positions Open.

Attendant positions at St. Elizabeths Hospital with salaries of $1,260 are open, according to Civil Service Commission who announces applications will be accepted not later than January 22.

Competitors will be rated on a mental test. Applicants must have reached their eighteenth but not their thirty-fifth birthday on the date of the close of receipt of applications, except that age limits are waived for persons granted veterans preference. They must be in sound physical health and capable of induring arduous exertion.

For these positions both male and female eligibles are desired.

Additional information may be obtained at Civil Service Commission, Seventh and F streets northwest.

James F. Kehoe (P), Printing Division, was elected president of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing Protective Association, Immediate Relief, last week.

Other officers selected are Pauline Mayer, Accounting Division, vice president; Samuel Graninger, Accounting Division, treasurer, and Emily Stone, secretary. For the board of trustees the following were named Horace Alexander, Printing Division; William Wertman, assistant chief, Accounting, and George Landis, Electrical Division, the latter to succeed Frank Gunning.

The board of directors will be composed of Howard Nutter, Engraving Division; Beatrice Atkins, Printing Division, and James Nehoff, superintendent, E and M Division.

There are more than 1,300 members of the association, both active and retired.

Wooden Curtains Eliminate Drapes

The choice of curtains is, of course, purely a matter of personal taste. The materials that may be used for this purpose are legion. Curtains may be dainty, audacious, stately or amusing. Novelty materials have been called in to play in recent years and hang side by side, so to speak, with the old favorites.

Funds obtained under the modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration may be used for alteration, additions, improvements or repairs which are permanent. One Chicagoan, however, purchased curtains for her home with these funds and remained "within the pale."

The windows of her dining room had built-in curtains of wood. They took the place of the regular window frame and made any sort of drapes unnecessary.

Long Boosts FHA Home-Buying Aid

Boston, Mass.—"The best guarantee of value any one can get today in home purchasing is to get the property financed through the Federal Housing Administration," according to Mr. Rodney W. Long, president of the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange.

"Once passed by the Federal Housing Administration," Mr. Long continued, "the property bears forever a hallmark of quality and worth and is a concrete evidence of the buyer's alertness in having his property conform to the rigid requirements of the Federal Housing Adiminstration. I can say to the home owners of New England that had such an organization as the Federal Housing Administration been available to those who bought so-called speculative houses in the last boom, millions of dollars would have been saved.

"When the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange indorses a project it does so only on the basis of sound worth. We have carefully looked into the Federal Housing Administration and we believe that its plan for financing residences is the finest development of the century, in safeguarding home buying and protecting home ownership through its long-term 20-year monthly amortizing mortgages and its requirements for eligibility of suitable property standards."

Painted Windows.

An attractive blue kitchen has the upper walls painted to simulate casement windows. A dark blue horizontal stripe, about three feet from the floor, appears to be a window box in which stenciled yellow tulips are blooming.

Sunshine Through Paint.

Much can be done with paint to bring sunshine into a room that is discouragingly dark in the daytime. Have the ceiling painted a light yellow. The window sills, together with the rest of the window woodwork, can be painted a slightly darker yellow. Walls, doors and door frames can be coated with a soft cream color and the floor painted or stained a dark brown.

Building Rush Brings Dearth Of Draftsmen

Improved Conditions in Construction Tax Architectural Force.

Improved conditions in the construction industry are reported from all sections of the United States by the regional directors of the American Institute of Architects, according to a survey of progress in architecture and building during 1935 by Stephen F. Voorhees, president of the institute.

A marked increase in architectural employment, amounting in some localities to an actual scarcity of draftsmen, is a significant feature of the recovery in this industry, Mr. Voorhees declares.

The institute directors, Mr. Voorhees reports, urge that governmental participation in the field of low rental housing be limited to procuring and disseminating general information and to furnishing financial aid for such proects, leaving to local agencies such functions as location, design, construction and administation.

The directors, he explains, recognize the importance of town planning and other local considerations in the formation and operation of a national program for the development of low rental housing.

"Nonresidential building has maintained a steady increase over 1934 totals and continued to increase during the closing months of the year, which normally show a reduction in volume of new construction," Mr. Voorhees says in part. "Federal assistance by loans and grants of money to finance the building of schools and other public structures is contributing to the improvement in this class of construction.

"Residential building continues to lead the field in volume of new construction. It is not necessary to quote statistics to show the obvious need of this activity. The cessation of building during the last four years; losses resulting from fires; depreciation; the increase in number of families; all are factors in the impending housing shortage.

"Federal housing agencies, by their promotional activities, have directed public attention toward home building and financing on a sound basis. Present bulding prices and rising rentals are factors favorable to residential building at this time and indicate continued activity in 1936.

"That the architects of the country have devoted much time during the recent years of inactivity in building to a study of the problems of their many sided profession is indicated in the reports of committee chairmen made at the meeting of the board of directors of the institute.

"New materials and methods of construction have been studied and experiments conducted looking toward an improved technique in building that would parallel the improvements made in other lines of production. The new year will see many of these experiments put to the test of practical application to buiding.

"One of the most encouraging experiences of the past year has been the higher rating attained by plans prepared by architects when submitted for Government-insured mortgages as compared with plans prepared without benefit of architectural service.

"To further his work the directors of the American Institute of Architects indorsed a plan to establish local groups of arcfitects prepared to furnish architectural service in the small house field in a manner to meet local opportunities and demands for such professional service.

"The directors also tendered to Government agencies promoting better small house building the assistance of the institute in raising the standards of value by means of the employment of competent architectural service."

In the field of architectural design, there has developed during the economic depression a greater consciousness of the social aspect of the architect's practice, Mr. Voorhees point out.

"Town and regional planning is receiving greater recognition by the architectural schools in preparing architects to broaden their horizons and to participate to a greater extent in social and civic activities," he continues. "The value of planned communities and garden suburbs as opposed to the haphazard placing of dwellings so prevalent in our cities is receiving increased attention.

"The committee believes that this quality is more likely to be embodied in our architecture when we realize our debt to the past and the value of its lessons in meeting the problem of today."

Architect Head Predicts Upturn In Construction

Sounder Base for Mortgage and Renewed Interest Held Factors.

An outstanding year for the building industry is predicted by George Herbert Gray, of the New Haven chapter of the American Institute of Architects.

A sounder base for mortgage loans and renewed interest in large scale improvement of city neighborhoods are two major factors in the general forward movement, he believes, with further stimulation coming from the new importance of the prefabricated house. There is also, he finds, confidence in the future of building investment, favorably influenced by the need for new building, available capital and a satisfactory price level.

Stability of mortgage investments has been improved by the new demand for the responsible certification of a building with regard to its materials, construction method, and general suitability to its purposes and to the neighborhood.

Poor Investments Cited.

"A surprising amount of mortgage money has in the past been invested on very superficial information, on buildings which were not what they were represented to be, and in neighborhoods where they did not belong," declares Mr. Gray, a former director of the institute for the New England division.

"The movement for certification has been gaining favor in limited areas for some years, and its adoption by the Federal Housing Administration as a prerequisite for the insurance loans has given great impetus to its general adoption. It is obvious that a sounder basis is established for mortgage loans where they are preceded by an exhaustive analysis and report on the neighborhood, the property itself, the plans and the specifications made by competent agents and followed by periodic inspection during construction.

"Also tending to give stability to mortgage investments are the requirements for periodic amortization payments and the lower charges for the money. All this has passed the experimental stage and its benefits should begin to be generally recognized and put into action.

Business Co-operates.

A widespread and more difficult problem is being solved, according to Mr. Gray, in the co-operation of real estate men in efforts toward improved city housing developments.

"The movement set on foot by the National Association of Real Estate Boards for the enactment by the various States of a statute authorizing neighborhood protective and improvement districts would clear up certain legal difficulties that heretofore have obstructed the large-scale improvement and development of city neighborhoods.

"This is doubly significant because of the organization that backs it. Welfare workers, architects and city planners have been attacking this problem for years; but in general, up to the present, the realtors have not seen their way clear to co-operate and many have obstructed. Today they are in the forefront with their own movement.

"The Federal Government in its slum clearance work has been frank in asserting that it can make only a beginning, can only build demonstration projects."

All Fields Far Behind.

Although every field of building is "far behind by all normal standards" after six years of depression, Mr. Gray warns that new building will not reach large volume unless price levels remain at their present levels.

"In these years of cramping and skimping, floor space has been the one item easiest to cramp and skimp on in the factory, the office, schools and homes," he points out. "With the advance in the consumer's goods production and sale has come an advance in the spending of wages which we may reasonably expect will soon be materially felt in demand for more space in homes, in stores, in offices and in factories. It will first effect an advance in rents and then when rents reach normal will be the signal for the new building in large volume.

"Taking the entire field of building, the price level has been maintained at an approximate level since the spring of 1933. At that time some groups of material producers began a rapid advance of prices and thereby killed a good start toward a pick-up in building.

"From this the Federal agencies learned their lesson, and it is hoped that the industries have not forgotten it. There is every reason why prices should now remain at approximately present levels until new building assumes large volume. In fact, new building will not reach large volume in the face of rapid advance in prices."

A minor factor which, Mr. Gray says, will affect general building activity in the coming year is the prefabrication house.

"The history of the movement for the prefabricated house in this country shows that its one real advantage has been in the attractive and sound system of financing. For some 40 years, portable wooden houses have been on the market, at first small, simple and pretentious, of late years much larger and more pretentious. Then certain mail order houses began selling the materials and contracting for the erection of houses built of standardized plans, houses running into tens of thousands of dollars.

"For the smaller houses, where a maximum of space must be had for a minimum money, the method seemed to have some merit, but judging from contracts which have found their way into the courts in the District of Columbia, the system is not appropriate for the better class of houses. Metal houses, owing to their easily scratched surfaces, offer more difficulties than their wood predecessors. Regardless of what may ultimately come out of the movement, it is stimulating to the general building movement."

Cost of Homes Varies in Many Parts of Nation

Price Range From $4,337 to $6,442 Shown for One Type of House.

It costs the buyer of a home nearly half again as much in one section of the country as it does in another to build the same identical one-family house, according to the Federal Home Loan Bank Review. The same home that can be erected in Columbia, S. C., for only $4,337 would cost as much as $6,442 in Providence, R. I. Exactly the same dwelling can be constructed in Baltimore for $5,028, but costs $6,033 in Cumberland, Md., only 125 miles away. In Chicago, the same home can be bought for $6,361, in Hartford, Conn., for $5,846, in Oklahoma City for $5,756, in Pensacola for $5,095, and in Colorado Springs for $5,972.

These comparisons are revealed by preliminary reports of the construction cost of an identical dwelling, received from 27 cities in all parts of the United States, to be published in the January issue of the Review, which points out that labor supply, transportation facilities and accessibility of materials play the most important parts in determining the local cost of building the average small home. The figures cover only the actual construction outlays and do not include home-mortgage financing costs, which vary widely in different sections.

Recognizing the vital influence of construction costs on the volume of home building and the activity of mortgage lending operations, the board is developing the first exact index ever attempted to cover the local trend of cost of small home construction in every part of the country, represented by actual data in some 70 cities. Current costs of materials and labor will be included, and the rising or falling trend thus disclosed at three-month intervals for the guidance of prospective home owners and the executives of home financing institutions.

"The possible uses of accurate local indexes of small-house construction costs are many," the Review says. "The movement of building costs, in relation to rentals, contracts or expands the volume of home construction. It is, therefore, a factor that must be known to all agencies concerned in the building or financing of homes—home-financing institutions, builders, materials dealers, and real estate operators. This is particularly true if the home is being built to sell. In addition, current costs of construction determine the replacement cost of any existing building, and so must be included in the making of any appraisal."

The typical home specified as the standard of comparison is a detached house of 24,000 cubic feet volume of sound design and workmanship, containing a living room, dining room, lavatory and kitchen on the first floor, three bedrooms on the second floor and an attic. The exterior is of wide-board siding with brick and stucco trim. A one-car attached garage is included. Unusual materials and construction features are avoided. The design meets the requirements of the average municipal building code. This home might be placed generally in the $6,000 price class, excluding land value.

The basic data consists of prevailing unit prices of materials and labor, compiled throughout the country of the personnel of the reconditioning division of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which includes architects and builders familiar with local construction practices. Items for overhead expense and contractor's profit are added.

The 27 cities, for which costs are reported in the forthcoming issue of the Review, are situated in four of the 12 Federal Home Loan Bank districts. In the next two months similar cost figures will be published for at least 40 more cities in the eight other bank districts. Each city will report four times a year, and comparison with previous reports will provide a guide to the trend of home building costs in each city, thus embracing the entire United States within each quarterly period.

HomeMortgage Lending Is Seen In Billion Class

Building and Loan League Head Predicts Great Activity in 1936.

That home mortgage lending by the local savings and loan institutions has moved into its first billion dollar year since 1930 is the observation of L. W. Pellett, Newburgh, N. Y., president of the United States Building and Loan League, as he looks at 1936 prospects. In the January issue of the league's official publication, Mr. Pellett predicts that some 90 per cent of the 11,000 savings, building and loan associations throughout the country will be actively in the lending field before the end of the year.

A series of hopeful pictures are painted by the league official in his 1936 forecast about the investment and home owner credit field.

On the home lending side, in addition to the billion dollars of new loans which he sees, Mr. Pellett notes four factors indicating recovery:

A steady and continuous rise in rents on residential property, giving owners of income property earnings on their investment and owner occupants a decided edge over their renting neighbors.

Growing out of the rental rise there will be greater demand for ownership of houses and lots and also of two-flats and larger residential buildings. This means much improved activity in the real estate market and higher sales prices on better classes of property.

Home building activities will be anywhere from double to triple the 1935 performance depending upon the vacancy and employment conditions in each area. Both of the previously mentioned factors will be directly influential in spurring on residential construction.

A doubling of the advances outstanding at the Federal Home Loan Bank System so that in its fourth year of activity this reserve credit institution will be coming into its own as an influential factor in supplementing the mortgage lending facilities of local institutions.

On the investment side, he sees an increased flow of savings into the associations as more and more of them are able to increase the earnings and the reasonable availability of funds on repurchase. As a result he expects that aggregate assets of the associations will show an increase at the end of the year for the first time since 1930.

"The year will probably bring a 20 per cent increase in rental costs pretty generally throughout the country," Mr. Pellett said. "There will be some pick-up in apartment building, but the major part of the increased residential building volume is likely to be in the range of the $4,500 houses. Much of the building of individual houses during 1935 has been in the higher brackets, too high to reflect that solid demand for the small home which can grow only out of the ability of the middle classes and the lower income groups to undertake home ownership. The 1936 prospects are for better days for these groups and the 1936 home building will reflect this in the increased volume of small new homes.

"From present indications, 1936 will be the best year from the general business standpoint of any since 1930. With the exception of some slight setbacks here and there and some seasonal dips in trade momentum, the tendency throughout the year will be for conditions to get better consistently. This outlook for better times includes not only the resumption of dividends by thousands of corporations, but the basic factor of hope for substantial re-employment. No small part of this hope is derived from the definite prospect of two or three times as much home building as we had in 1935."

Mr. Pellett predicted that by December, 1936, the credit outstanding at the 12 Federal Home Loan Banks will be around $200,000,000, and that, furthermore, the $300,000,000 available for investment in building and loan associations and in Home Loan Bank debentures by the HOLC will be used up by the end of 1936.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, JANUARY 19, 1936

School Film Department Here, Now 4 Years Old, One of Fastest Growing Branches

System's Movie Library Now Includes 400 Reels

But Cinema's Use Is Only Single Phase of Visual Instruction Work in the Capital, Declares Miss Dyer, Division Director.

By Jay Walz.

Several years ago educators discovered, and adopted for their own, one of the secrets of modern journalism:

A picture is worth 10,000 words.

Pictures and lantern slides have been used as classroom supplementary material for a long time. But only recently have the schoolmasters been able to go the newspapermen one better by taking advantage of moving pictures.

So recently have they done this, in fact, that perhaps relatively few citizens know that in really up-to-date school plants there are not only well-equipped book libraries, but also film libraries. Upon these, teachers may call for help any time they feel that seeing is the best road to believing.

Washington schools have such a library. It is only 4 years old, but it has more than 400 reels of film on some 200 educational subjects, ranging from Life Among the Eskimos, to How to Typewrite. There isn't enough projector and screen equipment in the schools yet to permit universal use of these pictures. However, last year the library circulated them for nearly 4,000 showings.

Grows Fast.

The motion picture department, housed now in Gage School, is one of the fast growing branches of our educational system, and takes the boys and girls in school today one more step away from the "book larnin" their parents received.

"I'd like the public to know more about these motion pictures," Miss J. Elizabeth Dyer, director of our public school visual instruction division, explained as she talked about her job. "Many people probably don't know we use motion picture films in our classes, and most of those who do know are likely to say, 'Oh, yes, motion pictures—that's visual instruction' or 'visual instruction—that's motion pictures.'

"If you write about us I wish you'd make it clear the two terms do not stand for the same thing. Motion pictures are one part—just one part of our visual instruction program. We can get many good films now—as many as our budget permits—and we can use them in class work a lot. But not always. There are times when still pictures, or some other kind of 'sight' material serves better."

So let's make it clear. Motion pictures as used in Washington schools are a part of the visual instruction program which Miss Dyer supervises.

Films Stimulate.

This understanding is important. Without it, as Miss Dyer says, people will think teachers use films not only to the exclusion of all other materials, but also just to give the youngsters "a good time."

Of course, they have a good time. They have rich experiences in these vicarious trips out of the class room. They get to see scenes and people they have never known.

But that is not all. Motion pictures are used in school, not for recreation, but for work. The object is to stimulate the minds of the boys and girls—give them something to talk about and to investigate.

"Usually," said Miss Dyer, "our pictures are used in connection with a class project—let us say a study of the coal mining industry. This project may continue through a period of six weeks or so. Some time during that period the teacher may want one of our films on the subject. We loan it to her. Then she will show her class coal actually being taken from the earth. The boys and girls will recognize things they have studied—the shafts, the clothes the miner wears, the light in his cap, etc. There will probably be many discussions during the showing and afterward."

Farm Film Favorite.

The coal picture, of course, is for the upper grades. But there are pictures for the beginners, too. Children do not even have to know how to read to learn a lot from "The Farm" film. Here is a real favorite.

"I have seen boys and girls in kindergarten get very excited over that one," commented the supervisor. "Some of the children had been to a farm. They wanted to tell about the cow they saw and how it differed from the one on the screen. Others, of course, had never been to a farm, and were thrilled to know what a cow looked like.

"And remember, no matter what they say, children begin their education as soon as they start to respond. It is stimulating pupils to react one way or the other that gives every teacher her big job.

"Motion pictures bring text book studies to life for pupils, and give them a great incentive to talk, or do something. And when they talk, or do, they gradually become articulate and skillful."

Not New Idea.

Efforts to make films a part of school work are by no means new. School buildings, erected as long as 20 years ago all have their projection rooms designed for showing educational pictures. Actually they have been used little, except for special attractions, when all pupils would be assembled in the school auditorium for the show. Perhaps it might be a tale of ancient Greece, or Rome.

The big step toward the practical use of motion pictures in school came with the development of smaller projectors and film strips. These diminutive machines can be brought right into the classroom, and focused on a screen no larger than a wall map. The equipment is all so simple that a teacher, after a little instruction, can operate it and conduct her class at the same time. And with her small group she can show and talk about subjects particularly interesting to them.

Miss Dyer has assembled five general groups of films. There is a geography section, a big one, because motion pictures offer an ideal method of telling boys and girls about remote corners of the world. There are reels on history—interesting because through them pupils can see Columbus discovering America, the Pilgrims landing, the Boston Tea Party, the surrender of Yorktown. In the art section films are available on art galleries, on painting, sculpturing and tapestries. Then there are pictures on health and hygiene, science and nature study, primary subjects, and business practice.

Try Experiments.

The $3,000 annual appropriation which Congress gives the District schools for motion-picture work must be used exclusively for films and equipment. However, many teachers have tried interesting experiments "on their own."

One supervising principal noting that many parents can not visit school at all and that others can see so small a part of what really goes on within classroom walls, decided upon this plan. She borrowed a motion-picture camera from a friend, bought some film and took "shots" of interesting class scenes. After several weeks she arranged a motion-picture program and invited all the parents to come. They saw their children in action.

Another instructor, interested in a project being conducted in her school, took her own pictures of it. Then she went to Columbia University for a summer course, took the film with her. Professors, before Eastern, "Quid fies, Asterie?"

The singers of Latin odes are Sarah Anne Rapp, Ethel Fisher, Lillian Grillo, Mariana Fagan, Audrey O'Flaherty, Gladys Simpson, Mary Richardson, Margaret Lowry, June Welty, Vera Weston, Betty May Douglass, Dorothy Beltz, Virginia Garrett, and the heralds—James Long and Morton Rose.

The Girl's Auxiliary has been giving tea dances in honor of each company of the Roosevelt Cadet Corps. On Wednesday, a dance was given in honor of Company M. Officers of the Second Battalion were also invited to attend. Florence Elliott, president of the club, with her committee, acted as hostesses.

Post Staff Photos.

Edward Thompson Is Elected President at Roosevelt High

Seniors to Have Class Night Exercises January 28; Claude W. Owen Chosen to Deliver Graduation Address.

January Class graduates at Roosevelt High School last week elected Edward Thompson president in elections preparatory to commencement activities the latter part of this month.

The seniors will have class night exercises January 28 and commencement January 31. They have selected Claude W. Owen, of Washington, to deliver the graduation address. Judge Ellen Ready will award diplomas, and Henry I. Quinn, member of the Board of Education, will preside.

David Singer, class valedictorian, will give his farewell address at the class night program, which will also include reading of the class poem and presentation of the class history.

The graduates will wear caps and gowns at their commencement.

In addition to Thompson the new officers include Francis Beamer, vice president; Anna Johnson, secretary, and Richard Schmidt, treasurer.

The advanced choral class of 44 students, directed by Miss Emma Louise Thompson, sang before students of MacFarland Junior High School Monday afternoon.

Another chorus, chosen from the students in the Latin department, have been learning odes for the celebration of the 2000th anniversary of the birthday of Horace. These students, led by James Long and Morton Rose as heralds, sang at the All-High Latin Assembly at

Teachers' College Plans New Courses

Wilson to Offer Additional Classes in February.

Wilson Teachers' College, one of Washington's public schools for normal training, will open several new courses at the beginning of the new semester in February, Dr. E. C. Higbie, president, has announced.

In the history department there will be new classes for English history, advanced recent American history and recent diplomatic history of Europe. Cartography will be a new geography subject.

The education department announces a course in mental hygiene for parents at the Powell School. Miss Halberg will hold the first meeting January 20, after which the new psychology teacher, taking the place of Dr. MacLear, who recently died, will preside. The appointment has not yet been made.

The science department is offering an inservice class in geology for teachers.

whom it was unreeled, were so impressed they decided to give her credit, counting the pictures as a kind of thesis.

The next step in visual instruction, educators feel, will be the introduction of the sound film. That will offer many opportunities, since the pupil will not only see a cow, for example, but also hear her "moo." Two senses, instead of one, will prompt him to respond.

But will he be stimulated? That is the problem. With too much of the work done for him, the first grader may find it necessary neither to think nor to use his imagination. He might just sit back and be entertained.

And that, Miss Dyer says, would never do.

Study of Art in Schools Challenge to Parents

Study of Paintings Held no Longer Sufficient; Present Trend Is Toward the Production of Creative Work, Says Authority.

The study of art appreciation used to be the business of the boys and girls in school. Now it becomes the lot of parents if they wish to follow what is going on within the classroom walls.

The children have turned to creative art work themselves, and it is up to the fathers and mothers to learn how to appreciate their efforts, according to Miss Elizabeth Wells Robertson, chairman of art for the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

"No longer is the study of paintings sufficient for an art study program in groups in any way connected with the schools," Miss Robertson wrote in a recent pamphlet for the congress. "The children of America have gone far in producing fine creative art with an expression of the inner life of the child. It is free and untrammeled and entirely without the inhibitions of former years."

Special effort is to be made through an educational campaign conducted by the Congress, to bring school art work to the attention of parents. Especially will the parents be called on to watch the study of drawing as an avenue of expression for the child, and as a means of developing the ability to analyze essential elements.

4 Stages of Growth.

The child, Mrs. Florence Williams Nicholas, art instructor at the University of Chicago, and Miss Mabel Trilling, professor at the Carnegie Institute of Technology, passes through four stages of development in drawing. Writing in the National Parent-Teacher Magazine they describe these stages as follows:

Aimless scribbling.

Symbolic drawing, definite in the child's mind, but with no resemblance to the real object.

Schematic drawing in which the child draws objects as he knows them to be, but not as they really appear, as, for example, drawing houses with transparent walls in order to show the furniture inside.

Representative drawing in which the child notes what he sees and tries to make the drawings look like real objects.

Project Campaign.

The National Congress intends to carry on activity in the 26,000 local units of its organization to raise the level of artistic merit and appreciation in the coming generation.

Local activity takes various forms:

In the Fairfield, Ala., unit a feature of the meetings is "Living Pictures," in which art masterpieces are reproduced by living models. Among the paintings reproduced are Whistler's "Mother," the "Madonna," by Van Dyke; "Hiawatha's Wedding Journey," and "Evangeline." The reproductions have been so similar to the original pictures that they have attracted the attention of persons interested in art throughout the State. Numerous requests have been received for their presentation at meetings of other organizations.

Big Frame Used.

In presenting "living pictures," a gilded frame 70 inches high, 50 inches wide, and 29 inches deep with a backdrop of green tarlatan is used. A brief account of the life of the artists, and the story of the painting accompanies each showing.

Paintings and consultation for mothers on art in the home form an important element in the first Mothers' Room of its kind in the world, opened recently in Cincinnati, Ohio. In Seattle, Wash., a poster contest for school children stimulated many original ideas and resulted in the creation of an artistic composition which was used in posters throughout the State.

Art in the program is to be taken in an extended sense. It will take such forms as gardening, beautification of highways and roadsides, the molding of pottery, and urns. Even knitting is recommended by the Congress committee as a hobby for women—and men too.

Because quilting is one of the very few really American home arts and a real folk art, there is no reason why the quilting bee could not be revived, suggests one of the booklets.

Fort Seminary Singers.

Arnold B. Fort, of Washington, has been chosen one of the Seminary Singers of Boston University's School of Theology for this season, officials there announced last week.

Honor Post at Trinity College Assigned Washington Student

Miss Mary Godfrey Will Be Class Poet; Elizabeth Shawcross Will Read Will; Songwriter Position Open.

One of the honor posts in Trinity College's June commencement activities has been assigned to a Washington student, it was announced after the undergraduate body had made its selections last week.

Miss Mary Godfrey, whose home is in the Capital, will be class poet.

Miss Mary Galligan, of Newark, N. J., will be class prophet; Miss Elizabeth Shawcross, Providence, R. I., will read the class will. One honorary postion remains open—that of class songwriter. This selection will be made after a competition in which all students may submit a composition. The song is sung at the commencement exercises.

Students in the meantime are preparing for another traditional Trinity Class Day. This one will come February 13 when Juniors conduct exercises attended by the entire student body. The feature of the affair is the presentation of a play. All details, however, are kept secret until the actual performance.

Miss Laura Douglas, of New York, is in charge of all arrangements for this production. An undergraduate dinner is also given on this day. Miss Louise Hayes, of Philadelphia, heads a committee preparing this part of the program as well as arranging for afternoon refreshments. The dining hall, and the auditorium will be directed by a committee whose chairman is Miss Alice Tehan, of Holyoke, Mass.

An eight-day period of prayer for furthering a movement which would unite the Catholic and Episcopal churches was begun at Trinity yesterday. This movement has gained considerable impetus since its recent inception, and has been directed by the Church Unity Octave Devotion Council. The entire Trinity student body will take part in the eight-day prayer services. Other exercises will be held at the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception during the same period. The exercises will mark the third annual Church Unity Octave Service. Benediction and a sermon will be given each night and different choirs from Washington high schools and colleges will sing. The Trinity Choir will assist at the exercises January 24.

Dr. Rainey to Speak To D. C. Educators

Youth Commission Director to Outline Program.

Dr. Homer P. Rainey, director of the American Youth Commission, will be one of the speakers at the midwinter banquet of the District Educational Association February 8 in the Mayflower Hotel.

Dr. Rainey, who resigned his position as president of Bucknell University to become director of the commission, will outline its work in his speech. He will sketch its five-year program to study American youth.

The commission's activities are sponsored by the American Council on Education and are backed financially by the general education board.

Thomas J. Holmes, chairman of the general affairs committee, has charge of arrangements for the banquet. He announced that a quintet of musicians of the National Symphony Orchestra, directed by George Gaul, will furnish musical entertainment for the occasion.

Class at Eastern To Dine and Dance

Fete for Graduates Will Replace Assembly.

Eastern High School's midyear graduates will have a class night Thursday that departs from the form of event students of previous senior classes have conducted.

In the place of a traditional assembly in the school auditorium there will be a banquet. And instead of a class play, history, poem and song, there will be dancing.

It will be a program simpler than the usual one, class leaders pointed out, and will enable more students to participate. Wayne D. Kniffin, class president, heads the committee on arrangements. He is assisted by Selma Frey, vice president; William E. McMahon, treasurer, and Marjorie Martin, secretary.

Charles Hart, principal, and Mrs. Hart will be guests of honor. Other special guests will include Miss Mary Jane Watts, assistant principal; Thomas J. Holmes, assistant principal, and Mrs. Holmes.

Guidance Association To Hear Dr. Hans Weiss

Dr. Hans Weiss will be the speaker at the January meeting of the Guidance and Personnel Association, formerly the Vocational Guidance Association, Tuesday night, in the board room of the National Education Association, Sixteenth and M streets northwest.

After Dr. Weiss' talk, there will be a panel discussion on "What should the Washington Secondary Schools offer the mentally slow pupil?" Members will be Dr. Weiss, W. J. Wallis, Miss Freda Egbert and Mrs. Mary L. Ambrosi.

Federation Leader Urges Education in Government

Mrs. Whitehurst Suggests That Schools Be Opened to Adults for Forums and Children Be Taught to Ask Questions.

By Mrs. John L. Whitehurst,

Chairman of Education, General Federation of Women's Clubs

The United States maintains the most extensive school system in the world and yet makes less use of it in the selection of public officials than do any of the other self-governing nations.

In nearly every field, except government, we have placed greater and greater reliance upon the person of competence and training for the work he or she is expected to do. There are still 175,000 independent units of government in this country, each with power to raise and spend money. Although we know that many of them are obsolete and useless, we cling tenaciously to appointing leaders by the same old method.

We must bring trained intelligence to bear upon problems affecting our political, social and economic welfare. This means that we must find ways of curtailing and eventually destroying the "spoils system" in public affairs.

Every position on the administrative, professional, clerical, skilled and unskilled labor levels should be a career position. In other words, the amount and kind of training should be closely related to the responsibilities of the office.

We must eradicate foreign radicalism from our schools and country. In the schools, our young people have learned to respect the Flag, and the Constitution and have gained knowledge of our national struggles for freedom and self-rule. Now these sacred ideas and ideals are being challenged. We read about children refusing to salute the Flag, about teachers refusing to take the oath of allegiance to the Constitution. The thing that should perturb and shake us is the bitterness displayed on the part of citizens, when protesting against doing something which, in the past, every true American was proud to do.

Democracy, in this chaotic era, can be preserved only be educating the people. Democracy in education and dictatorship in government cannot live together within the boundaries of any nation. The real task for the schools and the women of this country today is to prepare the individual for a realistic understanding of society and its problems, and to examine critically all proposals that are being brought to their attention. Scrutinize the teachers who teach your children and your neighbors' children. Do not permit advocates of foreign radicalism, under the guise of free speech, liberal thought and what not, to break down the confidence your children have in their government.

People Confused.

People are being offered many proposals for economic and social reconstruction. These proposals range all of the way from Fascism to Communism and include between these extremes, continuation of the old system, reformed capitalism, socialism and many others. People are confused, particularly those who have not had sufficient education to make them cognisant of the benefits derived in a democracy.

If all the schoolhouses in this country were to open their doors in the evening to conduct forums, where the citizens could go without charge to listen and to ask questions, it is believed that an intelligent citizenry would soon be established. Forums in each community would also provide educational facilities for adults in the environment in which they live and at their own level of interest. The foreign-born could be told of the benefits derived in a democracy in the past and the necessity for the preservation of that democracy in the future.

If teachers would conduct forums in the schoolrooms on subjects of government and public affairs, with an opportunity for students to ask questions and to discuss these questions, it is believed that much greater interest would be stimulated. The present method of having teachers do all the talking, or to have students study alone and then recite or write verbatim, will never create the amount of interest necessary for this type of work.

Roosevelt Cited.

President Roosevelt has said: "There was never a time in the history of this country when an examination of the fundamental principles, on the basis of which our public affairs are conducted, was more important."

The program of the Department of Education is outlined to meet this challenge. Join forces with all agencies working to preserve our democracy. Co-operate with patriotic organizations, educational agencies, church groups, publicity groups, such as radio, newspaper and magazine agencies, and soon there will be no need to talk about the propaganda of the foreign radical. Organized clubwomen should assert themselves so that our democracy will be preserved and this can be accomplished only through education.

In the field of education we have come a long way since Aristotle organized the Lyceum, trained the young legislators and statesmen of Athens and taught the science of government to the citizenry, but in the field of teaching government and the training of citizens for public office, we are not following the ancient Grecian precept. We do not train our legislators and statesmen—they are products, to a large extent, of a political system. We do not teach our citizens what they should know about government; on the contrary, in many instances it is deemed best that they do not know too much and therefore do not interfere with the "spoils system."

In order to develop public opinion for the emphasis of governmental studies in all of our schools and to secure the co-operation of the school authorities in the 48 States and the District of Columbia, a detailed program of work must be carried out. This requires, on the part of the various State education chairmen, the District education chairmen and the education chairmen in the 14,000 clubs throughout the country, tact, enthusiasm and a co-operative spirit.

Georgetown Regent Announces New Subjects for February Term

...U. Law School Adds 4 Courses Next Semester

...rettyman, Scott, Fegan Will Be Lecturers, Rev. Lucey Says.

Four new courses will be introduced in the school of law at Georgetown University next semester, which opens February 3, the Rev. Francis E. Lucey, S. J., law regent, announced yesterday. The lecturers will be E. Barrett Prettyman, District corporation counsel; Dr. James Brown Scott, professor of international law, and Dr. Hugh Fegan, assistant dean.

Prettyman has joined the Georgetown faculty for the first time and will give a general course on "Taxation" in the undergraduate department. He was signed up for the course last summer, but his duties were not to begin until the midyear term.

He will deal with the entire subject of taxation in his lectures, emphasizing especially the legislative field in taxation.

Is Former Dean.

In the graduate department, Dr. Scott will lecture on Roman law and jurisprudence, two fields in which he is fitted by extensive lecturing and research. A former dean of the law school of the University of Southern California and regarded as one of the leading authorities on international law, Dr. Scott has lectured for many years at the School of Foreign Service, but became a member of the law school faculty only in recent years. He formerly lectured on Roman law at the University of Heidelberg in Germany.

The fourth course added to the curriculum, dealing with English legal history, will be given by Assistant Dean Fegan, who has long been interested in the subject and has just completed some extended research in it.

Alumni Appointed.

Father Lucey announced that several prominent alumni of the law school have recently been appointed to responsible positions in the American Bar Association. In addition to Frank J. Hogan, of Washington, L. L. D., 1925, who was made a member of the executive committee, Carl B. Rix, a graduate of 1902, was appointed to represent Wisconsin on the general council of the bar association.

John W. Guider, class of 1925, of this city, was named chairman of the committee on communications, one of the most important in the association.

Justice Jesse C. Adkins, of the District Supreme Court, a graduate of 1900 and also a member of the law school faculty, is chairman of the judicial section of the American Bar Association. In Hogan and Dr. James Brown Scott the law school also has two representatives on the powerful resolutions committee.

Student Essays Show Great Interest in International Affairs

U. S. Neutrality Favored As Competition Subject

Librarians at 4 Universities Aiding in The Post Scholarship Contest Find Threatened War Embroilment of America Draws Interest.

America's threatened entanglement in foreign wars is the issue provoking maximum research among high school students in this section, according to the librarians of four local universities, American, Catholic, Georgetown and Howard, who are lending free reading material to hundreds of contestants in the third and current Washington Post scholarship competition.

Heaviest demands from the more than 12,000 contestants, as shown in a tabulation of the librarians' reports made this week at contest headquarters in The Post, are for references on the two topics covering the war issue, "Can America Keep Out of Foreign Wars?" and "America's Entry in the World War." A total of 30 problems in civics, economics, world issues and American history are stipulated for original essays in the current project, which offers major awards of tuition scholarships at the four local universities.

The extension library facilities at the colleges are available to all contestants residing in the eligible territory outside of Washington, embracing Alexandria City and 43 Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia counties. Approximately 3,000 students competing in the local public and private schools are meanwhile drawing heavily upon the Public Library and its branches as well as the Library of Congress, in their research upon the listed problems.

All Topics Covered.

The local demands have covered generally all of the 30 topics and no tabulation has been made as to preferences, so that the extension of the librarians' reports only partially cover the field.

However, with "The Italo-Ethiopian Dispute" ranking third in popularity, according to these reports, it is evident that the international war scare is uppermost in the minds of a majority of the nearby students. Teachers report many informal forums and much extra-curriculum research on all phases of the question.

Other popular topics, as indicated by the university librarians, have been "The Status of the Child Labor Amendment," "Uncle Sam's Tennessee Valley Experiment," "The NRA-Supreme Court Issue," "The Future of America's Railroads," and "Japan's Far Eastern Policy."

Issues involving country government, the civil service, city and rural slums, division of wealth, Europe's "danger zones," the proposed 30-hour week, social security and the merchant marine are listed among the more popular selections of hundreds of others who are now preparing for school finals scheduled throughout the month of March.

220 Schools Included.

With the enrollment during the past week of 26 more schools, the competition's roster rose to 12,767 individual contestants in a total of 220 schools. The new entries complete the roll call of all eligible public and most of the private schools in Washington, Alexandria and 32 of the 43 counties included in the contest area, with almost total coverage in the other nine counties.

The new entries and their principals and teachers in charge of intra-murals included the following four in Maryland: Elmer A. Wolfe High School at Union Bridge, R. M. Unger, principal as well as social science teacher in charge; Mount St. Mary's College preparatory department, Emmitsburg, Dr. John F. Cogan, principal; St. Mary's Seminary, St. Marys City, Miss Adele France, principal, and Miss Ruth Evelyn Byrd; St. Mary's Academy, Leonardtown, Sister Mary Eileen, superior, and Sisters Frances Clare and Mary Angelica.

New Virginia Entries.

The Virginia entries included the Colonial Beach High School, Alonzo Haga, principal and civics teacher; Randolph-Macon Academy at Front Royal, Col. John C. Boggs, principal, and Capt. Theodore Roberts, jr.; Criglersville High, Miss L. A. Davis, principal, and Miss Louise Reynalds; Mayfield at Fredericksburg, George L. Vicks, principal, and Paul E. Bowen; Effinger at Harrisonburg, W. N. P. Harris, principal and civics teacher; New Market High, R. C. Whiteman, principal, and Miss May E. Rupp; Triplett Vocational at Mount Jackson, J. Eldred Swartz, principal, and Miss Hilda Hisey; Woodstock, H. Evans, principal, and Miss Margaret Magruder; and Bridgewater, M. N. Suter, principal, and Boyd J. Glick.

Other Virginia enrollments came from Goshen High School, J. G. Goodwin, principal, and Mrs. G. E. Withrow; Manassas Agricultural, R. Worth Peters, principal, and Miss Emily Johnson; Manassas Industrial, G. F. Dudley, principal, and W. F. Bird; Luray, C. P. Chapman, principal, and E. R. Rothges; Unionville, B. H. Hudson, principal, and Miss Wycliffe Scott; Lucketts, G. F. Hankler, principal, and Miss Frances Titus; John Handley at Winchester, Garland R. Quarles, principal, and Dudley Bennett; Mount Sidney, O. S. Crute, principal; Augusta Military Academy at Fort Defiance, Col. T. J. Boller, principal, and Capt. Henry House; Robert E. Lee at Staunton, H. L. Bridges, principal, and Miss Sarah Bell; Woodrow Wilson at Waynesboro, R. C. Jennings, principal, and J. V. Fentress; Covington, W. R. Curtman, principal; and Craigsville, Martin M. Falks, principal, and Miss Mary Frances Driver.

The Post is offering a handsome silver medal to the winner in each of the school finals, to be selected by March 28. Each school champion will progress into the campus finals, scheduled between April 11 and May 9, in competition for seven full and two half tuition scholarships offered by the four local universities.

Gasoline Taxes Weigh Heavily Upon Motorists

Petroleum Committee Issues Analytical Report on Mounting Charges.

Motor vehicle owners have become doubly-taxed citizens who contribute, through special automotive taxes paid in addition to regular taxes, more than 14 per cent of all State and local tax revenue.

Tax reports received by the American Petroleum Industries Committee indicate that in 1934 these special automotive taxes amounted to $947,956,000, or 14.5 per cent of State and local tax collections totalling $6,508,000,000. Tax reports for 1935 are not complete, but in 1933 special additional automotive levies represented 14.3 per cent of total State and local collections, and in 1932 amounted to 14.2 per cent.

The committee's compilation of tax reports indicates that special automotive taxes have increased nearly 160 per cent in the period 1924-1934, while total State and local taxes have increased only about 40 per cent. It was explained also that the reports do not include the Federal automotive taxes, which add several hundred million dollars annually to the motor tax bill.

The larger portion of the additional tax bill represents State taxes upon gasoline, the cost of such levies exceeding $500,000,000 annually in recent years.

Classes in Safety Urged on Schools

Safety instruction as a required course in our primary and secondary schools as a means of reducing accidents charged against present-day traffic is advocated by A. W. L. Gilpin, vice president and general sales manager of Pontiac Motor Co.

"Recklessness," said Mr. Gilpin, "is just as possible in walking as in driving. I think the day is not far distant when we will see rigid regulations governing jay-walking, crossing against a red light, popping out between parked cars, and similar flirtations with the undertaker.

"A new generation, automobile-minded, will have better sense if the schools and the parents do an effective job of instilling safety in all its phases into the minds of the children."

Southward Bound.

The annual trek of Washington automobile dealers to Florida has started. J. B. Trew and wife, L. S. Jullien and wife and Whitney Leary and his wife have all started south by motor and C. H. Warrington and his wife left yesterday by plane.

Local College Of Law to Mark Its 40th Year

February 15 Banquet to Honor Washington School Anniversary.

The fortieth anniversary of the founding of Washington College of Law will be celebrated at a banquet February 15 in the Mayflower Hotel. In accordance with the custom of having a woman as toastmistress at every other one of the annual dinners, Elizabeth E. Benson, of the evening junior class, will preside. She was chosen by the faculty last week.

Richard W. Harr, president of the evening junior class, is chairman of the student banquet committee, with the following persons selected to head the various committees: Henry B. Cusick, Florence M. Brill, publicity; Daisy E. Hicks, Katie E. Brown, invitations; Woodrow W. Storey, Sarah H. Halbfinger, Berryman Davis, William McKinley, entertainment; Claude T. Lawrence, Walter T. Parker, music; Galen M. Buckles, Roland N. Price, decorations; Mildred E. Gooden, Brice D. Duckett, seating, and Edith E. Spaulding and Lorraine Wall Hurney, hostesses.

Midyear examinations at the college will begin tomorrow in all divisions and will continue until January 31. During these two weeks there will be no class sessions.

At the final session of Moot Court for the first semester yesterday afternoon the following senior counsel presented cases for trial: Abraham Brooks, Ocia W. Christmas, Ellis S. Stone, Marie R. Murray, Helen L. Kosaveach and Carl W. Phillips. Dr. Edwin A. Mooers and J. Edward Burroughs, jr., were the faculty judges.

De Soto Offering New Coupe Model

Prompted by Steady Gains of Winter Travel.

Consistent gains in winter travel prompted the De Soto Motor Corporation this week to introduce a new convertible coupe model several months earlier than usual.

L. G. Peed, vice president of De Soto, explained the company's action in announcing the convertible model at this time.

"With improved cars and highways, winter travel is increasing every year," he said. "The recreation points in the South and Southwest report a land-office business, with reservations booked months in advance.

"The windshield is permanently fixed and does not fold back like the old-type convertible windshields," he said. "This feature keeps drafts from seeping in around the windshield. De Soto engineers also have developed new methods for sealing the windows with sponge rubber. The rear window curtains fasten with a zipper, instead of the buttons used in the past."

Safety Legion Forming.

A Safety Legion has been inaugurated by the Buick Motor Co. in which it is hoped to enlist 50,000 Buick owners by July 1. The drive will be among the 2,500,000 Buick owners in the country. As outlined by Harlow H. Curtis, president of the company, the idea is to encourage Buick owners, by their own example and their influences in the local communities, to reduce accidents on the highway.

Chevrolet Financing Car-Junking Campaign

A new plan whereby the Chevrolet Motor Co. will retire thousands of old vehicles was described at a meeting of dealers and salesmen at the Mayflower Hotel on Friday by Glen R. Weeks, manager of the zone.

"Chevrolet has set up a fund of $1,000,000 to reimburse its dealers for all old cars taken in trade this month and scrapped," said Mr. Weeks. "The plan is operative over the entire United States. Coming at a time when safety is uppermost in public thought it is especially timely."

Dead Sea Fruit.

The apples of Sodom, which grow on the banks of the Dead Sea, are not apples, but a seeming fruit with a beautiful outside covering and ashes within. Figuratively, Dead Sea fruit applied to the disappointment found in sin.

Denver Society Arranges Party To Aid Afflicted

The Washington Ladies Auxiliary of the Jewish Consumptive Relief Society of Denver will hold its annual card party and dance Wednesday at the Wardman Park. Thousands of consumptives have passed through its portals and a great proportion have been returned to their families with their disease arrested.

The institution, which is the largest of its kind in the world, is ranked by medical authorities as among the best in the country in modern equipment and skilled professional personnel. While the institution is maintained by the free-will offerings of the Jews of this country, it is nonsectarian in its aid to a number of non-Jews who always comprise a part of the patient population and are made happy and comfortable under its roof.

Support of its beneficent work is derived from individual members and annual contributors, ladies' auxiliaries, as well as fraternal organizations and lodges, workingmen's societies, youth organizations, etc. At the present time eight Washingtonians are receiving treatment there.

Large Program Being Planned By Central Community Center

Music, Dancing and Drama to Be Featured January 28; All Centers in District Preparing to Take Part in One-Act Play Tournament.

Outstanding among the events sponsored by the Community Center Department during the midwinter season will be the program of music, dance and drama to be presented by Central Community Center in Central High School Auditorium Tuesday, January 28, at 8:30 p. m., when, in honor of the memory of Bailey F. Alart, late conductor of the Community Center Civic Symphony Orchestra, the orchestra, conducted by its associate leader, Samuel T. Ford, will give a program of music, assisted by the Schubert Singers, the Columbia Players and the Lisa Gardiner Dancers.

All centers throughout the city are preparing for the forthcoming one-act play tournament of the District of Columbia for 1936, from Tuesday, February 4, to Saturday, February 15, inclusive, at Roosevelt High School Auditorium, allowing five nights for the preliminary contests and one night for the finals.

This will be the tenth annual tournament of one-act plays held by the Community Center Department. The first city-wide tourney was held in 1927, when only eight plays were staged, all of which were entered by drama groups in the community centers. The Jewish Community Center won the tournament with Alice Gerstenberg's "The potboiler."

Interest in this season's contests is unusually high, owing to the prizes offered by Fred E. Hand to the play groups entering the finals. It is the first time cash prizes have been given in a tournament here.

In the various community centers new study groups are being started this week under the supervision of community secretaries. This is especially true of contract bridge classes, offering opportunity to beginners as well as to advanced players to study with highly experienced teachers.

At Southeast Center, in Hine Junior High School branch, two art groups will be formed this week. Adults will meet for the first time Thursday night at 7:30 with John Carroll, and children will meet for the first time Friday at 7:30 with Robert Lambcke. Art appreciation, painting and charcoal drawing will be taught. Also at this center, Friday night, January 24, a workshop program of one-act plays will be given by the Southeast Community Players in preparation for the one-act play tournament, and a committee from the Southeast Citizens Association will assist in selecting the play which will be entered in the city-wide tourney next month.

Roosevelt Community Center announces the opening of a new group in French conservation under the leadership of Miss Pauline de Brodes, Monday, February 3.

Three Women's Clubs Are Dined At Zonta's Intra-City Party

The Zonta Club of Washington was host to the Soroptimist, Quota and Business and Professional Women's Clubs at the intra-city dinner at the Mayflower Hotel Wednesday. Mrs. Frances Parkinson Keyes, writer and lecturer, was the principal speaker.

The next weekly luncheon of the Zonta Club of Washington will be held Wednesday at the Y. W. C. A. Charlotte Nevin, formerly international secretary of the Y. W. C. A., will address the club. She has recently returned from Geneva and will attend the Conference on the Cause and Cure of War.

Wars and rumors of wars-to-come notwithstanding, the members of Zonta International are proceeding steadily to cement the friendship between the women of the United States and Canada and those of European countries, it is stated.

Sponsored recently by Miss Fisher, a letter exchange plan is producing a voluminous personal correspondence between Zonta members in the United State and Canada on one hand, and their clubwomen associates overseas on the other.

The momentum of the letter exchange came originally from the membership lists of the organization. Miss Fisher, who is in business in Boston, is acting as a "clearing house" of information between the writers of the nations.

Zonta International, with headquarters in Chicago, is in its seventeenth year. There are 125 clubs, with a total membership of more than 3,200. Despite unsettled conditions abroad, Zonta groups are growing rapidly in the overseas countries where units have been organized.

Mrs. Goldman on Visit From New York Offices

Mrs. William G. Illch and Mrs. Gus Ring Welcome Executive to Washington Section's Meeting Held in Eighth Street Temple.

The Washington section of the National Council of Jewish Women held a membership tea Tuesday afternoon in the vestry rooms of the Eighth Street Temple. The guest speaker was Mrs. Maurice L. Goldman, of New York City, first national vice president of the council. With Mrs. William G. Illch, local president, and Mrs. Gus Ring, local membership chairman, the more than 200 new members were welcomed and entertained.

Mrs. Goldman, who also is chairman of the executive committee of the National Council of Jewish Women, has long been prominent in the educational field and in the fight for civil and religious liberties. Educated in the schools of Denver, Colo., and St. Louis, Mo., she worked her way through college. She is a graduate of the University of Missouri, where, for a short time, she taught in the department of mathematics. Later she taught in the high school of Jasper, Mo., and was instrumental in modernizing the curriculum of that school.

After her marriage, Mrs. Goldman took up residence in Houston, Tex., where she resumed her activities in the educational field and was a leader in the fight which resulted in the disbanding of the Ku Klux Klan and its demise in Houston. She was elected a member of the board of education of the Houston schools and served as president of the board for eight years. Here again she was instrumental in modernizing the school curriculum, a project which not only gained wide commendation from educators throughout the country, but was used as a "laboratory" for research work by Teachers College of Columbia University. During her term of office Mrs. Goldman also directed an $11,000,000 building expansion program.

One of Mrs. Goldman's educational hobbies was the little theater movement, in which she played an active part while living in Houston. She also has carried her interest in child welfare work and in child education. She is vice chairman of the German Jewish Children's Aid, Inc., a group that is caring for child refugees from the Nazi government, and is at present developing a program of religious home study for children and mothers under the auspices of the National Council of Jewish Women.

Mrs. Goldman began her activities with the National Council of Jewish Women as president of the Houston section, in which capacity she served for three years. Later she was for three years president of the Texas State Conference. She has been for some years a member of the board of directors of the National Council and for four years served as chairman of the department of service for foreign born.

The Mothers' Club of the Council, under the chairmanship of Mr. William Chase, will meet Tuesday night at the Home for the Aged on Spring road. The speaker will be Dr. Ivan E. McDougal, professor of sociology at Goucher College. His subject will be, "Shall Our Children Educate Us?"

Postoffice Official Tells Stamp Collectors Club About History of Hobby

Comptroller Slattery Recalls Adhesive Stamp Introduction

Firm Believer in Canceled Variety Because It Shows Real Postal Value in One's Album; Women Conduct Exhibition.

Another largely attended meeting of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., was held at Thomson School on Tuesday evening. Vice President E. V. Haines presided. The speaker of the evening was William L. Slattery, comptroller of the Postoffice Department, and the ladies of the club conducted an elaborate exhibition.

Mr. Slattery is an old-time collector starting in the days when his father was postmaster at Framingham, Mass. His address was replete with historical references all bearing on the introduction of the adhesive postage stamp.

Mr. Slattery had considerable to say regarding the collecting of stamps. He is a firm believer in the canceled stamp, for that variety shows its real postal value. However, he does not go so far as to say that the unused stamp has no place in a collection, for he has single copies of mint stamps in his albums.

Value Demonstrated.

The attention shown by the collectors to the workings of the Philatelic Agency demonstrates its value not only to the department, but to the philatelists as well. The future of the stamp collecting lies in the correct manner of instructing the boys and girls now in our schools in the art of collecting, for art it is.

He dwelt upon the early days of the Postoffice Department, especially giving extracts from reports of Amos Kendall, of Kentucky, who was Postmaster General in 1835 to 1840, whose foundation work has lasted well until this day.

When the adhesive stamp was introduced into England in 1840 only brief mention was made of the fact in reports in this country, and after the first stamps were made here in 1847 hardly any reference was made of the fact in the report of the Postmaster General.

Mr. Slattery has made a thorough study of these early reports and has a fund of most interesting information. Some of the early Postmasters General predicated future events with unusual accuracy, especially the warning of one as regards the sending of the paper, pamphlet and other matter through the mails from the North to the South that was to lead to that terrible conflict. When the telegraph was first announced there were those in the Postoffice Department who doubted the wisdom, as the telegraph might curtail the mail usefulness.

Metered Mail.

A significant fact was noted by Mr. Slattery that the increase in the use of the so-called meter mail had reached such a figure since 1922 that it was steadily increasing in total receipts, while there is a decrease in the value of postage stamps sold to the public.

The exhibition was made up of album pages as follows: Miss Irene M. Pistorio, nineteenth century Italian finely mounted with illuminated map; Mrs. W. C. Rice, Ballston, Va., pre-cancels, German new issues and cards; Mrs. Mabel L. Wilson, early stampless and other covers; Miss Alice B. Cilley, airmail and rocket label, especially notable the early rockets; Mrs. Ethel Taylor, educational exhibit of genuine value; Miss Marian A. Lancaster, stamps showing youths with illustrations; Mrs. J. D. MacKnight, United States; Mrs. Laura T. Corribeau, Cuba, Canal Zone, and the Kansas City roulette stamp, and Mrs. R. H. Rule, Switzerland. The ladies were greatly complimented upon the fine showing.

Next Tuesday the regular monthly auction will be held in charge of Lieut. Wright. There is a large quantity of both United States and foreign to be offered.

The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart.

It seems deplorable that philatelic literature now in possesion of the several Washington stamp organizations is inaccessible to both members and the public. The lack of a permanent meeting place is partly responsible for the above situation.

Leading philatelic societies have a large collection of valuable books, catalogues, scrapbooks and magazines, but it is difficult for even members to obtain any of this material. This is not the fault of any person in particular; rather it is the result of present conditions.

The librarian of each club is compelled to keep all material on hand but in no special order. While indexes may be maintained they are not generally consulted by reason of proper lack of facilities. At best the material is simply in storage awaiting another day.

Perhaps the time is now ripe for all philatelic organizations in Washington to join hands in supporting a plan for the establishment of a library. It should not be a difficult task to secure suitable quarters for the location of a library to embrace the material of every Washington stamp club.

There would then be assembled a large quantity of valuable material immediately available not only to club membership but to the general public. Methods of conduct should be merely a matter of routine and with the present standing of organized philately in the Nation's Capital the expense of establishment and maintenance should not be large.

The philatelic material in the Congressional Library is recognized throughout the country as being a collection of unusual value. It is consulted at all times by visitors from all over the world. It may not be amiss at this time to mention the fact that Washington philatelists do not appreciate its true greatness. It is constantly growing and the world's finest contributions to philately are to be found in this famous library.

Washington stamp clubs should advance in the field of philately. The establishment of a library for its own membership would be a step in this direction. Such a library would be of genuine worth. It no doubt would advance the establishment of permanent headquarters for meetings and exhibitions.

Paul Junior Club.

The Stamp Club of Paul Junior High School met Wednesday afternoon. This club is presided over by William Clark, who has served several terms as president. E. C. Combs is the supervisor. An interesting meeting is planned for Wednesday afternoon at 12:45 o'clock.

Newly-Tinted Air Mail Special Likely to Become a Best Seller

Sixteen-Center Coming Out in Blue and Red on February 10 in Response to Complaints Even From Postal Peoples Themselves.

It is safe to say that the 16-cent special delivery air-mail stamp now in use will be a best seller for the next few weeks. For some reason or other this 16-cent stamp has never been popular with the public and the mail clerks have every reason to complain about it.

The announcement of the Post Office Department that a new issue of this 16-cent stamp would be released on February 10 in bi-color was not at all surprising. As long ago as last August the suggestion that such a change in the colors of the stamp was made to postal officials but without avail. Now that the stamp is to be reissued in two colors it is expected that the stamp will prove popular in a large degree.

The new issue will be 84-100 by 1 44-100 inches in size, arranged horizontally, and will be of the same design as the present 16-cent stamp that was issued August 31, 1934. But it will be printed in two colors, the border in red and the central design, a reproduction of the Great Seal of the United States, in blue.

The change in color, as postal officials say, will have a tendency to make the stamp more distinct than ever, and thus it will be far more easily recognized by postal employes. The net result will be that a more prompt and expeditious handling of all air-mail special-delivery mail matter.

The stamp will be placed on first-day sale in Washington postoffices and at the Philatelic Agency. It will be placed on sale at postoffices throughout the country on February 11 or as soon thereafter as distribution will permit.

All collectors desiring first-day cancellations on February 10 may send a limited number of addressed covers, not to exceed a total of 10, with proper costs to the postmaster at Washington. In order to receive the February 10 cancellation covers must reach the postmaster at Washington before the close of business on that date.

Another Clipper Off Wednesday

Air Mail Plane Will Leave San Francisco for the Philippines via Hawaii.

The next flight on the transpacific air mail route will start at San Francisco on Wednesday. This flight will be via Honolulu, Hawaii, and Guam to Manila, Philippine Islands and return. The date announced for the return from Manila is February 1.

The supply of stamps that were used on the first flight from Manila to the United States, the 10 and 30 centavos, surcharged, has been exhausted at the Philippine Trade Commission, Barr Building, and reports are that no more can be secured.

Negotiations are still going on regarding the extension of the transpacific route from Manila to China. It may be several weeks before any official announcement is made regarding rates and date of the first flight to China.

Elliott Junior High Club Holds Gathering

The Stamp Club of the Elliott Junior High School met Tuesday afternoon with 40 members present. This club has been in existence for nearly three years and is under the supervision of H. M. Papers were read by John Thomas, Robert Kaufman, David Rhodes, Doris Dawson and Loraine Nichols.

Philatelic Society Conducts Auction

The regular monthly auction sale was held at the meeting of the Washington Philatelic Society at the Carlton Wednesday evening, J. H. Jenkins officiating.

At the meeting on Wednesday Col. Truesdell will display some of his stamps of China and talk on certain varieties in his collection. The public is invited.

Phantom of the Opera Isn't So Fanciful; "Met" Has One

Electrical Disturbance Makes Crackling, Sputtering Appearance Week Ago at "Mignon" Performance and Then Refuses to Perform for Engineer-Sleuths at Rehearsal.

The "phantom of the opera" isn't so fanciful as many think. National Broadcasting Company engineers are looking for it in dead earnest.

The "phantom" was discovered a week ago trying to steal the radio spotlight from opera stars during the broadcast of "Mignon" from the Metropolitan Opera House. It's not a wraithlike apparition. This opera spook made its manifestation in the form of crackles, sputterings and assorted rhythmic click-clacks. And the radio sleuths are still trying to track him down by means of electrical drains, filters and choke coils.

Like the traditional ghost, there's nothing earthly about this ultra-modern one. I haunts only the microphone circuits and, during the "Mignon" broadcast, mingled its scratchy clickings with the music that flowed through the tripley-shielded cables linking the Metropolitan auditorium with NBC's combined WEAF and WJZ networks.

Track Down the Menace!

Listeners blamed their radios or static. Engineers who heard the sounds on the network circuits wired Radio City headquarters for an explanation. Engineer James Gray, sitting in NBC's controls in Box 42, was first to discover the mystery soon after "Mignon" got under way. A crew of experts were dispatched immediately to the Met to track the menace down.

Systematically the engineers tested the many microphones used for the opera broadcasts. Some are hidden behind the footlights and others secretetd about the stage. But it was from the four mikes high up in the proscenium that the spook was found to be cutting up.

When the final curtain was rung down the engineers began to hunt for clews. They raised and lowered drops, tuned up the motors, switched on and off lights, elevators, air-conditioning machinery. But in vain. The specter stayed.

Bogeyman Needs Audience.

Doggedly the engineers persisted. They attended the Met rehearsal on Wednesday and tested, trid, inspected, experimented. But all their technical coaxing went for naught. For this was a temperamental opera bogeyman and needed an audience to do its best, or—in this case—worst.

According to O. B. Hanson, chief engineer of N. B. C., the phantom is the result of "some stray current going wild."

"When the Met spent $100,000 to recondition the 55-year-old house last summer," Hanson said, "N. B. C. made a completely new installation of the most up-to-date equipment, protecting all circuits with special lead and copper shielded conduits as well as the usual rubber insulation."

The "phantom" had appeared at no previous broadcast this season.

Saturday Feature for England Being Revived

England can't get along without its "Five Hours Back," the NBC program that has been sending America's radio entertainment to the British Broadcasting Co. for rebroadcast in the British Isles.

The program, a Saturday feature on the international exchange program for several years, was discontinued recently by B. B. C. in favor of a new series of its own. But English listeners demanded its return, so the series will start again Saturday, February 1, and be heard in America over an N. B. C. network at 12:30 p. m.

"Five Hours Back" presents well-known radio personalities and Frank Black and the N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra.

With the Hams

"Bob" Dennis, W3DJE, is getting as much radio equipment together as he possibly can these days. He expects to join the ranks of the benedicts very shortly and says, "I may as well get this stuff while the getting is good." G. Franklin Montgomery, W3FQB (note the parting of the name in the middle) claims he worked a K6 (Hawaii) with his single 10 on 40 meters the other evening. No one doubts this but not so long ago a K6 was unearthed somewhere around Annapolis. And while speaking of 10s we understand that when "Bill" Wiseman, W3ERG, gets on 160 meters with his pair of 10s, he has the whole band to himself.

Gordon O. Stone, W3FWT, is very busy with his new rig, which happens to be one of the new RCA transmitters, the first to be delivered in this part of the country. Incidently only QSA 5 R 9 and 9x reports will be accepted. William Russel, W3BOS, has a new Eimac 150T transmitting tube and when he gets the mate to this he expects to have about a kilowatt input to give the West Coast boys a little local QRM. Harold Herman, W3FGO, might be on 40 meters, but he still puts out a healthy signal on ten.

The race is on! Between Blair Barghausen, W3DBC, and Barron Freeburger, W3DK. The object of the race: Who can get to the transmitter first? In order to do this feat each must wade through the usual pile of transformers, BCL sets, etc., that can always be found in their respective shacks. According to George Marshall, 3DAP, Barron has a slight edge and suggests that Blair be given a handicap.

Larry Laser, W3CIC, is having double troubles. Not only did his antenna masterpiece come down but one of his new 50-watt graphite plate bottles went West. Since last September John Barthkowski, W3EVC, has been promising to be on the air "tonight" on 5 meters with a new rig which he built from a specially designed circuit of his own. As yet "tonight" has never come. Kiser Cranford, W3FII, is giving the BCLs a rest, while chasing the bugs out of his modulator.

Ye editor has found out that an oscillator will not draw any plate current with a negative voltage applied to the plate. This happened after building up a circuit and wondering why it would not oscillate.

The Mike and Key Club can expect a large turnout for their affair February 1. More than 30 members of the Washington Radio Club will attend.

Hams! Don't forget to send in your comments to the editor, Bernard Salisbury, W3FC.

"Roxy" Memorial.

Roxy's original "Gang" which first was heard over the radio at the dawn of broadcasting and was on the air thereafter for many years, will get together again today to participate in a memorial service to their old leader in a broadcast from WJSV at 8 p. m. Roxy, the famous radio and motion picture entrepreneur, whose real name was Samuel L. Rothafel, died in New York last week at the age of 53.

Members of the old "Gang" who will take part in the program include James Melton, Larry Taylor, Frank Moulan, Jan Peerce, Beatrice Belkin, Gladys Rice, Micky McKee, Henrietta Schumann and others, all of them well known in the entertainment world. A large orchestra will be conducted by Yascha Bunchuk, who acted in the same capacity with the original organization.

Gene Buck, president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and formerly a singer and song writer, will pay tribute to Roxy.

Mary Eastman Signed For Another C. B. S. Year

Mary Eastman, popular lyric soprano, has been signed by the Columbia Broadcasting System for another year and will continue to be featured in her Friday broadcasts at 1:45 p. m., as well as in guest star performances.

Miss Eastman has been presented in her own sustaining programs and on a number of sponsored broadcasts since her debut on the Columbia network in 1932. Recently she was presented as guest with Lawrence Tibbett in his current Tuesday night programs, and also is headlined in "Along Rialto Row" Saturdays at 9:30 p. m.

Ace Announcers to Be Film Shorts Narrators

Twelve radio announces and commentators, three of whom are past winners of the radio diction medal awarded by the American Academy of Arts and Letters, have been signed as off-screen narrators for the one-reel Vitaphone "Our Own United States" short series.

They include Milton J. Cross, David Ross and James Wallington, the academy medal winners; Kenneth Roberts, Gabriel Heatter, H. V. Kalternborn, Howard Planey, Harry von Zell, Paul Douglas, Harlan Reed, John S. Young and Don Wilson.

Capt. Fernando Chiapparelli, who discusses horses and horsemanship at WJSV weekly, visited the White House a few days ago and presented Mrs. Roosevelt with a hand-illuminated parchment of "The Prayer of the Horse to His Master," the captain's verse dedicated to the cause of kindly treatment to horses.

Author! Author!

Ed Farley and Mike Reilly, the Onyx Club musicians, who are responsible for the composition of the song mania, "Music Goes 'Round and Around," will make their radio debut with Eddie Cantor on the comedian's broadcast, tonight, WJSV, at 7. In recognition of the occasion, Cantor will sing an original composition titled "I Go Round with the Boys Who Wrote 'Music Goes 'Round and Around.'"

Farley and Reilly first composed their song describing the operation of a French horn for the amusement of patrons at the New York night club. The fame of the song spread by word of mouth at first until its energetic rhythms and lyrics mounted into what is practically a national craze.

As a result, Farley and Reilly are in demand everywhere and are scheduled for vaudeville tours, motion picture appearances and many other activities.

Behind the Local Microphones

In Maybelle Jennings, Welles Church, of WJSV, believes a radio personality with a grand future has been found. WOL's newest home studio presentation is built around Nat Lewis, vocalist (above), whose "Old Favorites Club" is aided by the capable Frank Young at the piano.

Mary Pickford's Hollywood "Parties" Signed by C. B. S.

Mary Pickford's famous parties at Pickfair, with Mary herself in the real-life role of charming hostess, will be presented over the Columbia network in a series of broadcasts to originate in the drawing room of her Beverly Hills mansion. The broadcasts will be heard Tuesday nights at 10, beginning early in February.

In the programs, entitled "Parties at Pickfair," America's Sweetheart will be the hostess at informal gatherings in her own drawing room. Her invited guests are to be Hollywood personalities and, figuratively, the radio audience, which will be made to feel at home in the spacious mansion. Each week Miss Pickford will arrange a program of entertainment by stars of the motion picture world. The music will be supplied by Al Lyons and his Cocoanut Grove Orchestra and vocal chorus.

This will be the first time in radio history that an entire series of programs will be broadcast directly from the home of a famous personality. Pickfair has been especially wired for this purpose in order to achieve the ultimate in informality and freedom from self-consciousness on the part of both guest artists and listeners. The famous actress plans to welcome her friends, draw them into conversation and arrange and announce the various entertainment features of the evening.

This is the second engagement which Mary Pickford has filled on the air. Her first was a series of tabloid dramas heard last season. During the previous year she toured the country in a tabloid version of "The Church Mouse."

Mumps!

Helen Hayes Gets 'Em—but in Script Only.

Helen Hayes is catching the mumps!

She has already noticed the first sign—a certain gleam in the eye of script-authoress, Edith Meiser.

Soon she will pick up a "New Penny" script for her Tuesday broadcast and find that her radio alter ego, Penelope Edwards, has a fully developed case. Then there will be the dickens to pay. For Miss Hayes confesses that she doesn't know how people talk who have the mumps. Everyone knows how the affected person sounds, but no one knows how to talk that way.

She even faced the task of speaking in like the venerable German-born queen in her stage production "Victoria Regina" with more assurance than she now awaits her portrayal of a young woman suffering from the popular voice-muffling malady. As Victoria, the actress carries almost a pound of cotton stuffed in her cheeks to create the appearance of age and rotundity.

"Wives" in the Script Plays

Education Board Observers Study C. B. S. From "Inside"

Three specially appointed fellows of the General Education Board, founded by John D. Rockefeller in 1902, are being given the use of facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System, beginning this month, in order to study methods of planning and producing radio programs. The experiment, designed to aid in the further development of the educational potentialities of broadcasting, will be carried on for three months.

With the assistance of a Columbia program committee headed by Dwight Cooke, producer of "America's Hour" and "To Arms for Peace;" Max Wylie, of the program department, and Davidson Taylor, well known in connection with his work on the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra broadcasts, it is planned to introduce the fellowship holders behind the scenes of radio, to let them observe broadcasting network operation, and to help them in writing programs of their own.

It is the hope that after this course in first-hand observation the trio will be able to return to the areas from which they were selected and apply what they have learned to increasing the educational possibilities of radio.

The three fellows chosen by the General Education Board are Arthur W. Colley, producer now affiliated with the University Broadcasting Council of Chicago; Luke L. Roberts, manager of radio station KOAC, which is operated by the Oregon State System of Higher Education, and Stanley P. Young, author, dramatist and critic, of Westport, Conn. They will spend three months at CBS, during which time they will be assigned work on two programs each as assistant production men.

They also will write script continuities, observe the way in which programs are actually put on the air and, if possible, work out complete sets of programs on their own initiative.

Columbia announces that the arrangement is in line with its general policy of co-operating with educational agencies in developing the possibilities of radio broadcasting as a cultural medium.

They'll Be on Your Dials This Coming Week

The lovely Gladys Swarthout (left, above) will be guest soloist tonight of the General Motors Symphony Hour, WRC, at 10. DeWolf Hopper, jr., has become a regular member of the "Roses and Drums" cast, Sundays, at 5, WMAL. To Hopper's left: Adrienne Ames, who stars with Ricardo Cortez in "A Prince There Was," "Radio Theater" production, WJSV, Monday night, and Louise Massey, Western lass of the "Show Boat" cast Thursday nights, WRC.

High Frequencies

A TELEGRAPHED message of approval from Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and several boxes of discarded war toys were among the 8,400 responses made to Eddie Cantor's initial scholarship competition announcement. Several persons offered to give cash donations, but Eddie explains that the $5,000 for the scholarship already is accounted for through his established trust fund.

Ted Powell, Aby Lyman's bandjoist, who composed "Boots and Saddles," has never been in Texas and never was astride a horse in his life . . . Richard Crooks will sail for Australia late in May to keep 50 concert engagements.

Producers of Columbia's "Radio Theater" productions are a bit puzzled over the idiosyncrasies of movie stars. First, Joan Crawford appeared and rehearsed in her stocking feet. Then Joan Bennett insisted on performing in ballroom slippers. A couple of weeks ago Sylvia Sidney went through her lines in high boots. Next Monday the entire organization will be at work early to see whether Ricardo Cortez comes in on stilts

Fred Allen told it on the air, but in case you missed it, it's about the lad who entered a dance marathon contest and won it after hoofing on and on for two years and two months. For the next year he did nothing, to the despair of his family. Finally his dad questioned him. "What's the idea, son, of not working at all?" "Well," came back the reply, "I'm sitting this one out."

William Joseph Zabski is known to the rest of the N. B. C. reception staff as "The Blue." Because his initials are W. J. Z., which is the key station of the N. B. C. blue network . . . Edward MacHugh, N. B. C. Gospel Singer, says he gets more requests to sing his theme signature than any other song.

Ernie Holst, the orchestra leader, likes this simile: "As forgotten as last month's amateur hour winners" . . . Johnny Green, Jack Benny show maestro, is writing a musical play with a radio background.

Alwyn Kach, N. B. C. announcer, minced about the Radio City studio the other night in a pair of brown shoes much too small for him. Reason: Alois Havrilla discovered he had to appear unexpectedly in the Rainbow Room in tuxedo and forcibly persuaded Al to trade his black shoes for the brown.

Victor Arden, "Broadway Varities" maestro, vouches for this one. It seems that Arden and George Gershwin were in the same musical show several years ago. After a performance they retired to a Manhattan hotel where Gershwin seated himself at the piano and was playing for Arden when there came a rapping on the door. "This noise must cease," shouted an irate neighbor. The "noise" was the famous "Rhapsody in Blue," then in the making.

Meet the Aces—Jane and Goodman

"Easy Aces," really Ace Goodman and his wife, Jane, use a microphone sunk into the top of the desk they use at broadcast time. It gives them more freedom of movement—literally and psychologically.

'Tough Guy'

Edward G. Robinson Shyly Asks to Watch Rehearsal.

Edward G. Robinson is one of the shyest stars yet to appear in the "Radio Theater." The celebrated "tough guy" of the screen and stage, known from coast to coast as a dynamic, hard-hitting, humorless type, surprised the program directors when he walked into the studio last week and said: "My name's Robinson. I'd like to sit around and watch this rehearsal if I wouldn't be in the way." The director was able to convince him after a while that it wouldn't be any trouble.

First broadcast of a song from the first opera written exclusively for motion picture production will be included in the General Motors concerts program of Sunday, January 19, when Gladys Swarthout, beautiful and talented mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, will sing a selection from Erich Wolfgang Korngold's new opera in the forthcoming film, "Give Us This Night." Nichols Proud of Watch.

Red Nichols, of the "College Prom" broadcast, still proudly displays a Christmas present from the boys in his orchestra. It is a platinum pocket watch, the back of which bears the names of all the members of the orchestra in their own handwriting. In place of numerals on the face, the watch has Red's name spelled out, with R-E-D where 11, 12 and 1 are usually found, two music notes flanking this nickname, and Nichols spelled out, replacing the seven other numerals.

The January Theater Takes On New Dimensions of Impressive Grandeur

The Theater, in Both Branches, Soars to Unexampled Heights!

Impending Stage Attractions and a Continuing Roster of Superlative Motion Picture Releases Set a New High Record for Season.

By Nelson B. Bell.

A DEGREE of distinction that seldom accrues even to the highest flight of midseason activities bids fair to illumine the theater of the living drama in the weeks that immediately impend.

Beginning tomorrow night, Philip Merivale and Gladys Cooper will occupy the boards of the National Theater in "Call It a Day," reputedly one of the currently reigning hits of the London season.

This coalition of brilliant acting talents is probably as felicitous a one as could be contrived from the present personnel of the British stage, although Mr. Merivale has done so many fine things in America of late years that he has ceased largely to be looked upon as an alien actor.

His Bothwell to Helen Hayes' fine delineation of the title role in "Mary of Scotland" still is a fresh memory in the minds of those who saw and enjoyed that admirable Maxwell Anderson blank-verse composition of two or three seasons ago.

Later, he did an uncommonly fine piece of work in the character of George Washington in the same author's "Valley Forge," a drama of the American Revolution that sounded a high purpose and possessed many elements of inherent greatness.

This was an assignment that many thought a bit odd to be bestowed upon an actor whose inclinations might have been out of sympathy with a role that signalized the overthrow of his own national government's dominance in the new Western World.

Miss Cooper's appearances on the Washington stage, unfortunately, have been less frequent. Her accomplishments, however, are such as to guarantee "Call It a Day" as a comedy-drama which, at least, will be authentic and moving in its characterization.

FOLLOWING Mr. Merivale and Miss Cooper to the local rostrum will be that exceptional artiste who has so individualized and stylized her form of entertainment as to render it unique.

Cornelia Otis Skinner by the skill of her writing—she authors all of her own scripts of both major and minor length—as well as by her facility of expression and expertness in pantomime, succeeds in peopling the stage with the full roster of a complete drama's dramatis personae, despite the fact that she is the only visible actress.

I can recall no more remarkable work, in its imaginative scope and dramatic content, than "Mansion on the Hudson," the most extraordinary of all of the creative expressions of this incomparable diseuse, whose talents reflect the inherited endowments of a revered and distinguished father, Otis Skinner, dean of American actors.

Miss Skinner during her week at the National will present not only a full catalogue of her most important "dramatic sequences," but also will augment her programs with a succession of her inimitable short pieces to which, one is led to believe, she has added some new ones since her last appearance on the same stage.

It is an eloquent commentary upon the value of Miss Skinner's work, and the National Capital's appraisal of it, that, whereas she began her local engagements with single appearances, she now is able to engage the interest of discriminating playgoers for a solid week of eight performances.

THEN will come that venerable star of many illustrious years in the playhouse, Mr. William Gillette, who, at the age of 80, returns to the footlights in a revival of Austin Strong's comedy-drama of "Three Wise Fools."

Written in 1918, this finely-fashioned examination of the private lives of three old fogies, rejuvenated by the advent into their bachelor home of the daughter of a former sweetheart of all three, may have lost something of its original flavor, the movement and temper of the times being what they are, but it still possesses those substantial virtues of sound logic, penetrating comedy and elderly irascibility that make for an enlivening and valuable evening in the theater.

Reports of the Newark premiere of this notable revival lend color to the belief that Mr. Gillette retains all of his renowned genius for theater.

His voice is said to have lost none of that priceless quality that made it always one of the most listenable vocal organs on the stage; his sense of comedy is unimpaired; no whit of the talent that made "Sherlock Holmes," "The Private Secretary," "Dear Brutus" and so many other memorable achievements great has been sacrificed to the passing of the years.

Mr. Gillette comes back an octogenarian, blessed with the youthfulness of vision, enthusiasm for his task and natural heritage of histrionic genius that place him once again among the leading figures of the contemporary theater.

May his tribe increase and his shadow never grow less!

PERHAPS the most impressive evidence that all honor in the theater does not attach itself to the living stage, these early weeks of the new year, is to be found in the fact that so many fine films are being continued for indefinite runs in the nominally first-run, downtown sector of the cinema.

Such pictures as "A Tale of Two Cities," "Ah, Wilderness," "Captain Blood," "Three Kids and a Queen," "The Informer" and "The Magnificent Obsession" make it extremely difficult to believe that all of the

in a scene from "Call It a Day," the new vehicle in which these gifted British players are to be seen in the National Theater for the week beginning tomorrow night. Mr. Merivale was last seen locally in the role of George Washington in Maxwell Anderson's "Valley Forge," and, before that, as leading man with Helen Hayes in "Mary of Scotland." Miss Cooper has not appeared on a local rostrum in recent months. Their association in this new play promises one of the notable events of the current season.

A Veteran Star Returns in Hit Of Older Day

John Golden Brings Gillette Out of Retirement to Play National Capital Again.

At a time when the stage is virtually inundated with a flood of sex and sociological plays, frothy musical effusions of gossamer frailty and farces of indelicate intent, it is refreshing to herald the return from retirement of an artist who in his many years before the public has never spoken or written one word that would cause the cheek of innocence to pinken with embarrassment.

This grand pillar of the theater is William Gillette, who is to appear in a comedy, "3 Wise Fools," that bears the hall-mark of decency, merit and reputation. This is an offering of John Golden at the National Theater, the week commencing Monday evening, February 3.

Washington is especially honored in being selected by Mr. Gillette to celebrate his return to the stage and his association with Mr. Golden; an event that is of signal importance to the theater.

When the history of the American Theater is written, there will be one name emblazoned high upon the tablet of histrionic achievement. That will be the name of William Gillette, a gentleman whose progress along the highway of creative endeavor has been symbolized by monuments of distinctive artistry.

His contributions to the American stage—"Sherlock Holmes," "Secret Service," "Held by the Enemy," "Too Much Johnson," "The Private Secretary," and many, many more, all attest to his authoritative grasp of things dramatic.

The story of "Three Wise Fools" can be epitomized very briefly. The triumvirate of the title consits of Mr. Findlay, a retired fiancier, a physician and a judge, atrio of narrow lives who live together in a conventional rut in an old-fashioned home in aristocratic Washington Square, New ork City.

Their entire existence is consecrated to the memory of one woman, whom all three loved, and lost, in youth; they live now by the rule of rote; they retire at the same hour every night; they have their bread and milk at the same minute each day; they play solitaire at the same time each evening—in fact, they have fallen into a routine of monotonous observances that indicate stagnation.

At a crucial moment a young girl enters their lives and household; the daughter of their old sweetheart. Her mother, dying, bequeaths the daughter to their care, as her guardians. The arrival of the girl completely revolutionizes their lives, home and methods of existence.

The play starts in an atmosphere of delicious comedy strongly outlined, wanders into interesting dramatic action with a suggestion of melodrama, then returns to its original purpose, conveying the message that there is much of comedy in the most serious problems of life.

In keeping with the dignity of his star, Mr. Golden has surrounded Mr. Gillette with an all-star ensemble, including James Kirkwood, Charles Coburn, Brandon Tynan, Mary Rogers, daughter of the much loved Will Rogers, and a young actress of brilliant steller possibilities; Isable Irving, co-star with John Drew and one of the most beloved women in the theater; William Post jr.; Addison Pitt, and many others.

Almost Native Is This Actor Of Many Parts

Merivale Has Done Valiant Service on Both Sides of the Atlantic.

"It isn't always a wild animal that comes out of the jungle, nor a painted savage. It could be, and it has been, an actor."

This is the way a biography of Philip Merivale, who will appear in the Theater Guild's "Call It a Day" at the National Theater, for one week beginning tomorrow night. He was born in the jungles of India, where his father was at work as a civil engineer helping to construct a railroad. Just for practice he likes to repeat the name of his birthplace — Rehutia, near Manikpur, India.

He cannot speak from a positive knowledge of the occasion, even though he was present, and was its principal player, but the natives who were working for his governor (that's his English for Dad) thought it fitting to celebrate his advent in the world by laying fruit offerings on the doorstep of his then humble abode. A dozen fruit stands might have been equipped every morning, so generous were the natives with their tributes. Maybe that's why, thinks he, no subsequent fruit offerings ever have come his way as an actor!

To go back, Merivale is to be found waving a palm in Sir Frank Benson's revival of the Greek tragedy "Orestes." He had not a single line to speak, but this did not deter him from seeking a speaking role at the first opportunity, which quickly came his way.

One after another, the important roles in the different plays of the Bard of Avon fell to his lot and he appeared with nearly every one of the leading English stars—Sir Herbert Tree, Phyllis Neilson Terry and George Arliss.

Then David Belasco cast him for the role of Bassanio to support David Warfield in "The Merchant of Venice."

It was Mrs. Pat Campbell who influenced him to come to America in 1914 as her leading man in Shaw's "Pygmalion," and today he is pretty much of an American, for this country and its playgoers have been kind to him, as he always is eager to admit.

After serving with the Canadian air forces in the World War he returned to America in 1919 and toured with George Arliss in "The Mollusc" and "A Well Remembered Voice." Then in quick succession came "A Young Man's Fancy," "One Night in Rome," "The Tragedy of Man" and "Call the Doctor."

An S O S from London sent him scurrying over there to do the title role in "Will Shakespeare," but he was soon back on these hospitable shores, and a year later was to be seen as Bassanio in Belasco's "Merchant."

His appearance in "The Swan" right through to his portrayal of Hannibal in "The Road to Rome," are today a part of American stage history. While waiting for a genuine stellar role to come his way, he appeared in "The Jealous Moon," and "Paola and Francesca," and then came stardom for him in "Death Takes a Holiday," followed by hs great triumph in "Cynara."

All season before last in New York, with Helen Hayes as Mary, he was Bothwell in Maxwell Anderson's "Mary of Scotland."

Three Newest Plays Leave Main Street of Theaterdom a Bit Cold

Zoe Akins' Vehicle for Jobyna Howland Is Short of Life and Two Others Survive by the Proverbial Margin of Eyelash.

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Broadway was not encouraging to dramatic art this week. Because, forsooth, or even egad, there was precious little dramatic art to be encouraging about. One pattern comedy called "O, Evening Star," which brought Jobyna Howland back from a considerable stretch on the Pacific Coast. One serious drama of life on a Western farm before and since the Supreme Court did its stuff, called "Mid-West," and a little something intended to be serious, but which excited the first audience to snickers and even guffaws, called "Truly Valiant."

The Jobyna Howland play will probably reach you through the movies. It has been withdrawn from the theater. If it is done as a picture, it should, I think, be played by either Henrietta Crosman or May Robson. It is a little too much for Miss Howland.

"O, Evening Star," represented, as reasonably as I can figure it, a gesture of friendship on the part of Zoe Akins, who wrote it, and a gesture of gratitude on the part of Harry Moses, who produced it.

The legend, if you are interested, runs like this: Back in 1919, when Zoe Akins was just emerging from St. Louis as a young writer of promise and a protege of Will Marion, of the St. Louis Mirror, a play of hers called "Papa" was produced in New York.

Jobyna Howland, who had made some little progress with a stage career after Charles Gibson had selected her as one of his early models, she being a tall girl, and as beautifully statuesque as Liberty herself, had a part in "Papa."

That was the beginning of an enduring friendship. Miss Akins went on from there to success as a playwright, with plays that included "Declassee," "The Greeks Had a Word for It," and "The Old Maid," which last year won the Pulitzer prize. Miss Howland went in for comedy of the lighter burlesque type, reaching her Broadway peak playing in support of Ina Claire in "The Gold Diggers" and Eddie Cantor in "Kid Boots."

IN 1922 Miss Akins wrote a comedy called "The Texas Nightingale" for Jobyna. The reviews were mostly favorable, but the business was terrible. Then both Miss Akins and Miss Howland found themselves, after varied experiences, headed for the movies in Hollywood. Miss Akins wrote "The Old Maid." Miss Howland played before the camera in such numbers as "Stepping Sisters" and "Once In a Lifetime."

"The Old Maid," on the stage, was a huge success, putting Miss Akins back in the Broadway limelight and bringing an underwear industrialist from Cleveland, Ohio, named Harry Moses, into prominence as a producer. Mr. Moses was grateful. Miss Akins was in funds. Miss Howland needed a play. So . . .

Miss Akins wrote "O, Evening Star" for Miss Howland, basing it on the inspiration of the late Marie Dressler's experiences, seasoned with those of other actresses of similar sentimental trend. Mr. Moses took a part of his "Old Maid" profits and produced the play handsomely. And Miss Howland, given another chance at Broadway, gave everything she had to give to it. If I could add a happy ending by reporting the complete success of "O, Evening Star" that would be perfect. Unhappily that cannot be done. The play had a single week's run.

It was, as a matter of truth, a shallow play. And Miss Howland, whose training has been mostly in comedy, and pretty rough comedy, much of it, was not happy in this sentimental drama.

The story was of an Amy Bellaire who had been a great musical comedy star in her day. Bankrupt in 1917, she was forced to auction off the contents of her Riverside drive home. In 1931 she found herself broke in Hollywood, and subject to the insults and jeers of the upstart dictators of the screen.

Hired as extra for a Western drama she filled in for a leading woman who lost her voice at rehearsals. Instead of playing the part straight Amy burlesqued it. Instantly she had the tired studio force laughing fit to kill, was caught in the act by one of the junior Strassbergs and was eventually made a star with a contract paying her $2,000 a week for life. Her support included Frank Conroy, viciously true to one type of director, and Merle Maddern, modestly helpful as a loyal friend.

IF integrity of purpose and honesty of achievement could be converted into cash in theatrical New York James Hagan would be in for another money success with his "Midwest." He is the lad who wrote a little comedy called "One Sunday Afternoon" a year ago and saw it zoom slowly into such favor that it played the better part of a year on Broadway and did fairly well on tour.

The new play is as direct, as simple and as honest as was last year's comedy, but unfortunately it provides no more than static drama. A depressing, sad little story of an honest farmer who tried to live as a decent citizen should and rear a family on a Western farm only to find himself defeated by about everything from drought to taxes, not to mention the Supreme Court.

Of Luke Zanhiser's six children, only one stays on the farm with him, and this one is moved finally by a restless wife to try his luck in the city. Of the other five, two sons were lost in the war, one daughter died young and another married and moved to California.

But, greatest tragedy of all, the most promising of the children, a brilliant boy for whom the family sacrificed everything that he might have an eastern college education, came home a rabid communist and got himself hanged by a group of neighbors who objected to his inciting their field hands to strike.

In the end Pa and Ma Zanhiser are left alone to pick up their lives where they find them at the end of a drouth and start all over again. Then, I suppose, the floods came and washed out their planted seed.

Honest drama demands emotional support. "Mid-West" is largely a statement of fact that gives an audience plenty of reason for serious thinking but none at all for partisan cheering. The youthful communist's protest is clearly stated, his father's argument is plain, common sense. There is a proper respect for both. The lynching is an off-stage effect and therefore of negative dramatic value, and when it is all said and done nobody cares much about anything that has happened.

"Mid-West" is as honestly played as it is written. Curtis Cooksey and Jean Adair are the afflicted farmer parents, Van Heflin the radical son, and Bernadine Hayes a restless daughter.

ANOTHER of those plays that are seriously intended but frequently strike a first night crowd as being funny was the one called "Truly Valiant." It was written by an Irving Stone who last year did a biography of Van Gogh, the painter, that attracted a good deal of favorable attention, and who has been prancing wistfully toward a career of letters ever since he left the University of California in 1923 and gave up teaching one of the cinema's more distinguished young actresses who appears this week on the screen of the Earle Theater with Franchot Tone in "Dangerous." Miss Davis' best-known work, perhaps, was done opposite Leslie Howard in "The Animal Kingdom," in which she performed a task that all but won her the academy award.

VICTOR McLAGLEN, that Gargantuan young fellow who did himself so proud in the role of Gypo Nolan in "The Informer" and now returns to a local screen as co-star with Freddie Bartholomew, of "David Copperfield" renown, in "Professional Soldier," the current screen offering at Loew's Fox Theater. McLaglen, by virtue of his work in "The Informer," has taken top rank among the actors in the celluloids.

CORNELIA OTIS SKINNER,
the brilliant diseuse, who returns to the National Theater for a week of her inimitable sketches beginning Monday, January 27. There is an individuality about everything this richly endowed young woman does that places the stamp of authentic artistry upon both her abbreviated character impressions and full-length dramatic studies.

News Items and Gossip of Plays, Players and Events in the Playhouse of Midseason

Keith's Makes Known Its List Of Major Films

Scheduled Attractions Are Notable Both for Stars and Able Stories.

The RKO Keith Theater, where currently Irene Dunne is being presented in "Magnificent Obsession," announces that this picture is remaining a second week, with Frank Buck's third adventure film, "Fang and Claw," to follow.

But that, as a well-known radio character puts it, "is just the beginning," for following the Buck picture Keith's has definitely set Margaret Sullavan in her new production, "Next Time We Love," from the Ursula Parrott best seller, "Next Time We Live."

This will be followed by Ann Harding and Herbert Marshall in "The Lady Consents." "The Lady Consents" is an original story, adapted by Anthony Veiller, and has in the supporting cast Margaret Lindsay, Walter Abel, Ilka Chase, Edward Ellis and Hobart Cavanaugh.

The Harding-Marshall starring vehicle will be followed by Robert Donat, whose performance of "The Count of Monte Cristo" will never be forgotten, in "The Ghost Goes West."

Jean Parker plays opposite Mr. Donat, with Eugene Pallette prominent in the cast. The picture was produced by Alexander Korda in England.

"The Ghost Goes West" will bring Keith's to Friday, February 21. On that day, if the staff is still standing on its feet, they will be on hand to open the doors early and wide, for that date marks the coming of the new Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers picture, "Follow the Fleet." Irving Berlin, as in the case of "Top Hat," wrote the score for the new picture.

In order, will follow Walter Huston in "Rhodes, the Empire Builder;" Irene Dunne, Helen Morgan, Paul Robeson, Charles Winniger and others of the original Ziegfeld stage production in "Show Boat;" Edward Arnold in "Sutter's Gold," Roland Young in "The Man Who Could Work Miracles," and Carole Lombard in "Love Before Breakfast," from the Faith Baldwin story, "Spinster Dinner."

Theaters Back Charity Balls In City Drive

Responding, as usual, to a call for help in a civic cause, theater men of Washington have pledged to Commissioner George E. Allen, general chairman for the President's Birthday Ball, their best efforts in making this city-wide event a success. At a meeting attended by Harry E. Lohmeyer, of Warner Bros.; Carter Barron, divisional manager for Loew's, and Hardie Meakin, of RKO-Keith's, plans were made for running a trailer the week previous to the ball, advertising the event.

The theater men also agreed to co-operate in the furnishing of talent for the various ballrooms and are considering plans to hold special midnight shows the evening of the ball, with the proceeds going to the general fund.

Present plans call for a city-wide carnival of dancing, with grand balls operated simultaneously in a group of the larger hotels, the one ticket permitting attendance at any or all, as the bearer chooses. Guy Lombardo and his famous orchestra will play part of the time at all the events and local musicians will fill in the balance of the program.

Chairman Allen expects to sell at least 30,000 tickets for the event at the one price of $2.50 per ticket. Seventy per cent of the proceeds go to Children's Hospital, for the treatment of infantile paralysis, and 30 per cent to the Warm Springs Foundation.

Star Prefers Classics.

The favorite authors of Claudette Colbert, now appearing in "The Brides Comes Home," are Shakespeare, De Maupassant and Victor Hugo.

WILLIAM POST JR., AND MARY ROGERS, who appear in the foremost juvenile roles in support of that venerable artist of the theater, William Gillette, who comes to the National in a revival of Austin Strong's play of the "Three Wise Fools" the week of February 3. Miss Rogers, who began her professional career under the name of Mary Howard, of course is the daughter of the late Will Rogers.

Notes on a Week's Observation By a Manhattan Dramatic Editor

Thoughts on the Variant Homicidal Charms of Murder Intrigue a Commentator Who Sees Merit in Mr. Gillette's Revival.

By Willard Keefe.

NEW YORK, Jan 18 (AP).—Reluctantly the concession is made that murder is accomplished with more grace in Hollywood than attends it on the stage. Murder as entertainment, that is.

This shamed acknowledgment—revokable with the arrival of a good murder play—is inspired by sight of "I Want a Policeman," a formalized study of homicide just come to the stage.

The explanation of this is easy. The films have Dashiel Hammett's urbane studies for a pattern. The stage remains faithful to such money-making thrillers as "The Bat" and "The Cat and the Canary," compendia of the standard frights, with the property man and the electricians working to remedy shortcomings of the authors.

In the theater the idea persists that murder is a thing of horror, and the audience must be agitated into a state of terror properly to receive it. In pictures it is a lark, something fairly upsetting, perhaps, but on the whole a grand stimulus to a tired mind and socially just about supreme.

HOLLYWOOD'S best example of murder for refined folk is "The Thin Man." This novel of Hammett's the picture producers had the foresight to intrust to two of the colony's wittiest adapters, Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett. These two not only preserved the author's original jaunty disregard for homicide as a world evil, but added to it a few of the light-hearted lunacies that served them so well in their stage play, "Up Pops the Devil."

When "The Thin Man" lengthened out on the screen, the audience was engrossed not so much in a murder in the offing as the antics of the happy couple on holiday, the retired detective pressed to the solution of the crime and the adoring heiress he married.

Nor was the film beggared of its excitement to make way for this romantic pair.

It remained a melodrama, with the crime a very large part of it—but used only when needed. This seems the right idea, for it is possible that even people accused of murder don't think of it all the time.

REGRETTABLY, there is no lightness in "I Want a Policeman." There is some funny business from inept cops and a few ludicrous terrors, but of wit and raillery not a trace. The murderer is the great absorption and you are helped to remember him by means of a darkened stage, sliding panels, screams in the dark and a display of firearms to appall Sir Basil Zaharoff.

Briefly the tale of "I Want a Policeman" is of the death of one Eric Davidson, a man whose passing is a positive pleasure to many. Suspicion darts around like a roulette ball, settling in justice on the culprit you could have pointed out ten minutes after the crime.

Sylvia Field, Harold Moffett, Estelle Windwood, Weldon Heyburn and a great many armed folk manage to make it awesome and often nerve-wracking.

AT the moment the local stage appears to be purging itself of a few items of no great moment—"Truly Valiant," "Granite," "O Evening Star"—hence Newark is visited for matters of importance.

There William Gillette, returning to the stage at 80, appeared in "Three Wise Fools," which Austin Strong wrote back in 1918. In this Gillette is a choleric old gentleman charmed out of tedious existence by a girl brought suddenly to his home—a blithe exercise in 1918, but less compelling in these wicked times.

The real news of the occasion is that Gillette gives a fine performance, carefully planned and with all the fussy preoccupation with detail that marked his unforgettable Sherlock Holmes. His voice is still dry and incisive, one of the theater's best.

The late Will Rogers' daughter Mary is an attractive ingenue in a generally admirable company.

'The Informer' Runs Fortnight At the Little

With new attendance records being set daily, the Little Theater has scheduled "The Informer" for another full week, beginning today and running through Saturday.

The great film, chosen by Washington and New York dramatic critics as the finest of 1935, is the first to run two weeks at the local revival house. Victor McLaglen's performance in the picture was called the best individual piece of acting for the year by the local critics.

Although a box office failure the first time it was shown here, "The Informer" has been a consistent success for the Little. First revived last fall, it set attendance records exceeded only during its return run last week.

The story is based on the Irish rebellion before creation of the Free State. The intense dramatic work of McLaglen is aided by a great cast, which includes Preston Foster, Heather Angel and Margot Grahame.

The Gayety.

Coming to the Gayety, starting with the usual matinee today, will be none other than the famous Georgia Sothern, the dynamic destroyer of rhythm. Miss Sothern is now playing in her third consecutive year at the Apollo Theater in New York City, making this her only out-of-town engagement. Her male assistant is the famous Harry Clexx, a funny fellow. A clever chorus also will be on hand—or foot, as the case may be.

CROSS & DUNN,
The two singing comedians whose tuneful talents have made them familiar figures to Washington audiences. They return to the stage of the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater this week as headliners of the stage portion of the entertainment that co-stars Bette Davis and Franchot Tone on the silver sheet.

Burton Holmes Extends Tours Into the South

On Tuesday He Will Expand His Remarks to Cover an Engaging Latin-America.

As the second offering in his current series of screen travel revues, to be presented in the National Theater Tuesday afternoon, Burton Holmes is to extend his ground and aerial adventures through the Latin Americas with a vicarious visit to Guatemala, the Canal Zone, Colombia, Peru, Inca Land, Bolivia and Chile, climaxed by a thrilling flight over the Andes in which we are to be brought face to face with the mighty Acongagua, highest peak on the Western Hemisphere, 23,393 feet.

Some of the high spots of this tour, are expected to add many new pictures and impressions to the travel gallery of Mr. Holmes' auditor-spectators, will be found throughout beautiful Guatemala; at the Canal Zone, where geography makes one dizzy as we watch the sunrise out of the Pacific Ocean; in the flight to Bogata, and in the exploratoin of Colombia; in Lima, the "City of Kings" and once the luxurious capital of the Spanish viceroys, and in the sensational flight to Cusco—high up in the sacred valley of the Incas, "People of the Sun."

It was to this picturesque and fabulously rich land that Pizarro and his band of adventurers came in 1531, and in less than 11 years the empire of the Incas had ceased to exist and all its treasures of gold, silver and precious gems had become a possession of the Crown of Spain.

On the following Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Holmes will lend his guidance to a tour across Argentina to Buenos Aires and along the east coast of South America to Rio de Janeiro and the valley of the Amazon.

Famous Speaker Is Coming Here Monday, Feb. 17

Capt. John B. Noel, official photographer and chronicler of the famous pioneer Mount Everest expedition, will give an illustrated lecture at Constitution Hall on Monday evening, February 17.

He will tell the story of the miracle at Lourdes and of St. Bernadette, the latest Catholic saint canonized by Pope Pius XI.

Castles, pastoral landscapes, the grotto where the sick and dying journey every year, torchlight processions and the glorious pageantry of the canonization at St. Peter's will be shown on the screen by Capt. Noel's own invention, the color dissolvograph, a new art in color pictures which reproduces every shade in nature.

He has personally addressed audiences of over a million people in the United States and Canada during the past five years, and is well-known in Washington.

Miss Skinner Is Soon to Be Here In Her Sketches

Cornelia Otis Skinner will begin her annual week's engagement at the National on Monday night, January 27.

Miss Skinner will offer during her week's stay here, three of her "plays for a single actress," namely "Mansion on the Hudson," "The Wives of Henry VIII" and "The Loves of Charles II."

In addition, Miss Skinner will add to the modern monologues that precede her plays four new creations that are called "Christmas Morning," "The Vanishing Red Man," "Luxury Shop" and "Liebestraum."

Miss Skinner's repertory for the week will be divided as follows: "Mansion on the Hudson," Monday, Tuesday and Saturday nights and at the Wednesday and Saturday matinees; "The Wives of Henry VIII," Wednesday and Thursday nights, and "The Loves of Charles II," Friday night.

KAZANOVA,
the exotic young woman who comes to the headline position on the stage half of the bill at Loew's Fox Theater this week with her Tziganes. This novelty in vaudeville booking has been acclaimed one of the outstanding hits of the season in theaters and cities in which it has been seen.

CLAUDETTE COLBERT AND ROBERT YOUNG, in one of the romantic scenes of "The Bride Comes Home," which will be the next attraction on the screen at the Palace Theater, following the indeterminate run of "A Tale of Two Cities." Miss Colbert's most recent screen hit was in "She Married Her Boss," a subject in which she played opposite Melvyn Douglas.

boasts the producers of motion pictures have made of late months, concerning the merits of their output, are not true.

There is not one among these continuing screen exhibits that does not merit the respectful attention of any seeker after drama of superior worth and significant import.

It seems not more than the film deserves to reiterate last Sabbath's statement that in "A Tale of Two Cities" the screen approaches close to the zenith of its artistic achievement.

Not only is Ronald Colman's Sydney Carton an unforgettable character creation, but every other member of a cast that runs to exceptional proportions is fully equipped to execute the task in hand to best possible effect.

This is only one of the listed releases that attains superlative heights. Practically all of the other subjects I have named lay some sort of claim or other to distinguished consideration.

How long this exposition of the high reaches of the thespic art may be expected to continue there is no present way of determining.

It sems to be enough for the purposes of the moment that the theater, both in its living and shadow manifestations, is soaring to the top of its form, in a quaint manner of speaking.

Not only the theater, but the patron is to be congratulated.

Plans Perfected For Annual Play Tournament

The one-act play tourney lists for 1936 are closed. Today at 2 o'clock the directors of the plays that have been accepted by the executive committee will meet with the committee headed by Dorothea Lewis, chairman, and Mrs. E. K. Peeples, chairman ex-officio, to plan the details of the forthcoming contests that open Tuesday, February 4, in Roosevelt High School auditorium.

There will be five nights of one-act plays, this season. The finals will be staged Saturday night, February 15, in Roosevelt Auditorium. The winner of the tourney will receive $50; second, $25. Another $25 will be divided between the third and fourth plays in the finals.

Fred E. Hand has donated the $100, which for the first time in the ten years of this city-wide drama tournament, makes prizes possible.

The Community Center department this week will place season tickets for the 1936 tournament on sale at the AAA, the Willard, and the Hotel Washington ticket bureaus.

Newest Plays Leave Gotham Slightly Cold

in the University of Southern California shortly thereafter. It lasted one night.

"Truly Valiant" may have been founded on fact, for all I know. I have a suspicion it had some such foundation because the young man was at pains to declare it to be entirely fictitious. Fact or fiction, it carried no conviction as drama.

The story was of a girl who accepted a position as maid in the household of a college professor of economics. She was working her way toward a degree. Immediately she arrived the son of the household fell in love with her, and so did the professor. Eight months later, when the boy asked her to marry him at the end of his school year, she was placed in a fearful position because she was fated in due time to become the mother of the professor's child.

HERE, as you may see was at least a howdy-do. Each of the truly valiant souls concerned, when the truth was boldly told, was eager to sacrifice himself or herself. The professor offered to give up his career, divorce his wife, and marry the girl. The wife was ready to forgive and forget for the sake of her husband's career. The boy wanted to marry the girl any way and protect her after she had presented him with a little half brother, and the girl was ready to go away and bear her child and her shame alone. When I left the theater the girl had left, the boy had knocked his father down and followed after, and the mother was weeping silently into both hands.

The audience, starting to sniker in the first act, gained courage as the play wore on and with vicious glee turned every line it could into a laugh. The actors stalked courageously through their parts. Ian MacLaren (and he just free from playing the incestuous Cenci a few weeks ago) was the professor; the late Charles A. Stevenson's daughter, Margot Stevenson, played the girl; Alan Handley was the son, and Martha Mayo the wife. I pitied them.

Young Mr. Stone's inspiration stemmed from a quotation from Shakespeare, "He's truly valiant that can wisely suffer the worst that man can breathe." I trust he met the test.

New Contracts.

Gertrude Michael, currently appearing in "Woman Trap," and Robert Cummings, young juvenile actor, have been given new extensions on their Paramount contracts.

Coward Comedy Scheduled for Current Week

On January 22 and 23, the Capital Players are presenting Noel Coward's "The Young Idea" at Pierce Hall, under the auspices of the Bekefi-Deleporte Institute.

One of Coward's earlier comedies, it deals in most amusing fashion with the efforts of two English children, Gerda and Sholto, to get rid of their father's second wife in order to effect a reconciliation with his first wife, their mother. How they scheme and make up outrageous stories in order to drive away their mother's suitor and coax her into remarrying their father, makes an evening of hilarious entertainment.

Gerda and Sholto are played by Janet Coon and Frank S. Koonce. Their father is played by John Mann; their mother by Elinor Cox Karsten; their step-mother by Ruth Perrott. The gentleman from Chicago is played by Harry A. Westcott. Others in the cast are Dick Stringfellow, Romaine Stevens, Clarence Moore, Carlisle Smyth, Arthur Westover, Crystal Tardy, Mildred Franckenberg and Kay Palmer.

New Article on Contract Bridge Rules Informs Beginners About Routine of the Deal

Privileges of the Player During Auction Restated

Principles Governing the Double and Redouble Analyzed With Description About Option Over Enforcing Penalty and Consultations.

By Frank B. Lord.

This is the second of the series of articles dealing with the rules and laws of contract bridge as agreed upon and promulgated by the Whist Club of New York, the Portland Club of London, and the Commission Francaise du Bridge of Paris. It concerns the auction; that is, the period of the bidding.

After the deal is completed, each player in rotation, beginning with the dealer, must bid or pass. If all four players pass in the first round of the auction, the deal is abandoned and the deal passes in rotation. The same dealer may not then deal again, but rather the player on his left. Otherwise, following the first bid, each player in rotation must make a call (a bid or pass) until three players have passed successively, at which time the auction closes.

Each successive bid must either name a greater number of odd tricks than the last preceding bid, or an equal number of a higher denomination. Thus, one club, one diamond; one heart, one spade; one diamond, Two clubs; one spade, two hearts and so forth. The bids rank upwards, clubs, diamonds, hearts, spades, no trump.

Rule for Doubling.

Any player may in rotation double the last preceding bid, if made by an opponent, or redouble it if it has been doubled by an opponent. Doubling and redoubling do not affect the number of tricks in the bid or its value for the purpose of the auction. A bid that has been redoubled may not again be doubled or redoubled.

When a bid is doubled, or doubled and redoubled, a player may in rotation make a further higher bid until the auction closes. Thus, if A bids four spades and B the adversary on his left doubles, his partner C may redouble or bid five of any other denomination, or if C should pass the double, A may either redouble or bid five of any other suit and so on. Otherwise he passes.

The final bid in the auction becomes the contract. The player who for the side that made the final bid, first bid the denomination named in the contract becomes the declarer; thus, if A starts the bidding with one heart and it develops in the course of the auction that his partner C bids four hearts which is the final bid, A becomes the declarer and plays both his own and his partner's hand which is played with the cards face up on the table immediately after the first card is led by the adversary on the left of the declarer. There is no penalty, but it is considered bad form for the dealer's partner (dummy) to place his trumps face up on the table before the adversary makes his initial lead after the auction is closed.

Player's Privilege.

During the auction a player may ask to have previous calls restated only when it is his turn to call. A call is a term used to express a bid, a pass, a double or a redouble.

When an irregularity is committed any player may draw attention to it, ask his partner whether he knows his rights and give or obtain information as to the law governing it.

All question as to what penalty applies to a given offense must be settled prior to the actual payment of a penalty or the taking of other action. A penalty once paid or action once taken stands, even though at some later time it is discovered to have been incorrect.

Next week questions of insufficient bids and calls out of rotation, mistakes that are frequently made inadvertently, will be discussed. These questions are highly important to the bridge player and often provoke much argument. The rules, not always understood, are explicit.

Preparedness Is Ruling Principle in Bridge Bid

Few Moves Are Possible in Culbertson Plan Without It.

By Ely Culbertson.

The principle of preparedness is an interesting and important feature of the Culbertson system. Very few bids should be made without taking into account the probable responses of one's partner—with emphasis on such responses as might be embarrassing.

Years ago each partner expressed his holding as though it were completely independent—with results that were in many cases appalling. Given such misfit hands as

♠ A J 10 6	♠ 9 5
♥ 7 6 2	♥ Q 5 3
♦ A Q 10 8 5	♦ 9 4
♣ 8	♣ A J 9 4 3 2

The bidding was sure to go

NORTH	SOUTH
1 diamond	2 clubs
2 spades	3 clubs
Pass

Obviously there was no chance of fulfilling such contracts.

Today the bidding recommended under the principle of preparedness would be

NORTH	SOUTH
1 spade	2 clubs
2 diamonds	Pass

The contract would not only be one trick lower, but in the proper suit. And the factor that would so guide it would be North's preparedness on his first bid for the most likely (and in this case most embarrassing) response from his partner.

Along the same lines have gone the bids of the responding hand. Holding spade K J 9 3, heart 6 2, diamond Q 9 7 5 2, club 5 4, the partner having opened the bidding with one heart, the prepared bid is not two diamonds, on the five-card suit, but one spade. The latter bid prepares for a two-club rebid, leaving the diamond suit available for a cheap bid at the two level and for a pass to a possible heart rebid. In the latter case it is true that the diamond suit is never shown, but experience has taught us that with a hand justifying only one response, it is most profitable to show the major suit.

Take-Out Prohibited.

Preparedness prohibits a take-out double of one spade on such a holding as spade 7, heart A 3, diamond A K 9 5 2, club K 10 8 6 4. We are not prepared for the two most likely responses of partner: (1) A leave-in of the take-out double, and (2), a heart bid. So we overcall rather than double. Conversely, if we rearrange the same cards as follows: Spade K 10 2, heart A 8 6 3, diamond A K 9 5 4, club 7, we now have an excellent take-out double, suited to any action that partner may take, since we would welcome a leave-in and be able to rescue a club response with diamonds.

Average players and experts alike will do well to apply the acid test of the preparedness principle to ticklish bidding situations.

* * * *

We are all familiar with the type of player who is wonderfully alert where nonessentials are concerned and fast asleep on the really fine points. The sort that invariably pounces on a lead from the wrong hand, insisting that his own partner's honor be led through instead of up to, thereby earning for himself a glare of pure hatred from said partner, who was fully capable of protecting himself.

Recently I witnessed an amusing example of this "wide-awakeness." The opponents had just played a hand at three no trump, in which the dummy had held, among other cards, all four of the aces. The declarer announced, not unnaturally, "Four no trumps and 150 aces." Whereupon a howl came from the alert defender and the indignant protest: "What! Why, the dummy had an ace!"

And he didn't know why the other three players and the kibitzers became convulsed with laughter.

* * * *

When a player can determine just how he will play to the eleventh trick before he has embarked on the third trick he can afford to stretch a hand in the bidding to the breaking point. The East player in the hand which follows should have realized that with an expert as declarer the set would be at most one trick—and that the hand might actually be made. South's optimism stood him in good stead, while East's questionable double served only to point out declarer's proper play.

Failure of Player to Anticipate Response Results Dismally.

NORTH
♥ A 10 8
♣ A K 5 3

WEST
♠ 8 6 5 2
♦ A Q J 9 8 6 2
♣ 10 8

EAST
♠ Q J 9
♥ J 6 4 3 2
♦ K 4
♣ Q J 7

SOUTH
♥ K Q 9 7 5
♦ 10 5
♣ 9 6 4 2

The bidding:

1 ♣*	Pass	1 ♥	2 ♦
2 ♠	Pass	3 ♣	Pass
3 ♥	Pass	4 ♥	Pass

*North's first bid should have been one spade.

West opened the fourth-best spade, not wishing to give up a possible diamond tenace. Dummy won with the ace, and the ace of trumps was laid down. South's suspicions were confirmed when West failed to follow suit. A long pause ensued while South went over the entire sequence of plays necessary to guard against the best defense.

Hand Seemed Hopeless.

The hand seemed hopeless unless the clubs broke three-two, so the ace and king were led from dummy and a low club surrendered to East. That worthy cashed the king of diamonds and continued the suit, West winning with the jack. A spade return at this point would have made things very easy for declarer. All South would have to do would be to win with the ace, pick up East's trumps by leading the ten and eight through the jack, after which all of his cards would be winners.

But West led with a third round of diamonds, and South needed all of his skill to pull the hand out of the fire. He ruffed with the eight. East dared not overruff, so he discarded a spade and South discarded the club. The ten of hearts was next led and held the trick. Dummy's club followed, and if East ruffed, South would overruff, pull the trumps, and cash the ace of spades. East therefore discarded his last spade and South did likewise. Dummy's next lead was the ace of spades, completing the trump pick-up. South could overruff any trump East played and thereby make his contract.

D. C. Chess Tournament Is Slated for January 25

Champion to Be Picked in Round Robin Events; Entry Deadline January 23; Leading Players Are Listed.

By Willard H. Mutchler.

The annual tournament to determine the holder of the District chess championship title is scheduled to commence at 8 p. m. Saturday, January 25. Prospective entrants are urged to notify A. Y. Hesse, 236 Cromwell terrace northwest. Any player within the metropolitan area is eligible and the entrance fee has been set at three dollars.

The tourney will be a single round-robin event, with play on successive Saturday evenings. Held under the auspices of the District of Columbia Chess League, the scene of the fray will be the Capital City Chess Club, in the Hotel Gordon. Entries will not be accepted after January 23.

Vladimir Sournin, E. M. Knapp, Champion Martin C. Stark, and two unnamed dark horses have entered to date. D. H. Mugridge, Capital City Club champion and former holder of the District title, undoubtedly will attempt to regain the crown, while V. L. Eaton, problem composer, may also be expected to participate. The winner of the tourney also becomes the temporary holder of the I. S. Turover silver trophy, which is to become the permanent property of the player first to succeed in acquiring the title for three successive years.

Also looming on the local horizon is the annual tournament to settle the championship question among the players in the local high schools. A meeting was held during the past week to discuss plans for the event. Reuben McLeroy, of Central, who won the title last year, has been graduated, and the title will, of necessity, change hands. Robert Knox, of Central, and William Heatwole, of Roosevelt, are listed among the favorites.

Combination Play.

Fred Reinfeld, whose previous works have earned him the distinction of being America's foremost chess author, has issued the third volume in his "Modern Chess Library" series, titled "The Elements of Combination Play." Chess players are ever alert to discover, in their every game, a combination, or planned sequence of moves, which will leave the opponent thwarted at every turn and culminate in assured victory.

Reinfeld's plan of presentation rightly assumes that there exist numberless combinations capable of classification, by virtue of their origin from broadly typical positions which occur repeatedly in over-the-board play. He illustrates with nearly a hundred well-chosen examples, most of them from modern master-play.

The attack on the king castled on the K side is a frequent means to victory. Reinfeld explains how this is accomplished by a variety of methods, e. g., via the KR file, the KKt file, the KB file, the seventh rank, and via the diagonals QKt-KR7, QR2-KKt8, QR-KR8, and others. It is the type of book whose perusal will yeld immediate returns by making evident winning continuations in one's games which might easily be overlooked by the player without background of study. And for such a purpose we commend it highly, and congratulate the author for his ability to render obscure complications lucid and understandable. The volume is priced at $1.50 and may be procured direct from Reinfeld, 2265 Newbold avenue, New York City, or from the Chess Review.

D. H. Mugridge, Capital City champion, last Tuesday brightened ladies' night at the local club by giving a simultaneous exhibition. Mugridge finished with the creditable score of 12 wins, two draws and one loss. The lone winner was Miss Emma Bran, while Thomas Stevenson and Mrs. E. L. Jeffers earned the draws. Miss Bran also lost an encounter to Mugridge. Others to bow included C. M. McLaughlin, J. DePorry, Col. J. A. Kirby, Miss Maude Sewall, Miss A. W. Jones, Mrs. M. J. Wilde, Mrs. H. E. Kittredge (three games), Mrs. A. F. Schwarzkopf, and Mrs. E. R. Shepard.

Correspondence Game.

Today's game was a well-contested effort played in the 1933 leadership "B" tournament of the Correspondence Chess League of America, and is culled from the current issue of the C. C. L. A. Bulletin. W. Trolio, of Memphis, proceeded cunningly and concluded with an announced mate in five against N. Hurd, of Ozone Park, N. Y.

Atlantic National Card Opens At New York Last Week of Month

Pair and Team-of-Four Championships at Stake in Week of Play for Trophies of United States Bridge Association.

The Atlantic National match of the United States Bridge Association will begin at the Park Central Hotel in New York January 28 and will be in session for one week. Pair and team-of-four championships will be decided as well as mixed pair and newspapermen's pair titles.

Many of the leading Eastern players have already filed their entries for the tournament. Ely Culbertson will head a team in the team-of-four contest and will also play in the pair and the mixed pair events.

His partner in the former will be Richard L. Frey and Mrs. Culbertson will sit across from him in the mixed pair match. Mr. and Mrs. Hal Sims are also scheduled to take part, as well as such New York experts as Theodore A. Lightner, Louis H. Watson, Samuel Frey, jr., A. Mitchell Barnes, John P. Matteys, Sydney Rusinow, Walter Malowan, Albert Morehead and Sherman Steans. It is also reported that the Four Aces, Messrs. David Burnstine, Oswald Jacoby, Michael T. Gottlieb and Howard Schenken will likewise participate.

If this proves to be true, it may mean a more amicable relationship between Ely Culbertson and this team. The Four Aces have not lost a major match in which they have entered in the past two years and Ely Culbertson has not played in one with the exception of the American Bridge League's Chicago tournament about two monhts ago.

Following Culbertson's victory over Sims the Four Aces challenged him but he declined to accept. The challenge has recently been repeated with the same result. The Atlantic National may be the medium by which he will be brought into competition with this premier foursome, although the contest would not be as spectacular as the one which the Four Aces sought to stage with him.

Feature of Tourney.

A feature of the team-of-four tournament will be that all teams must split up during each match, every member of each team playing with every other member at some time during the match. This is the first time that such a plan has been used. Previously, a team was composed of two pairs, and each pair remained intact throughout the match. Teams may have five members, but only four may play in any single session.

The mixed pair match is likely to be the most popular, as is the case in any tournament. A new event never before played is the newspaper pair championship, for which Mrs. Culbertson has given a cup. Only working men of the press are eligible. Since many bridge champions also write bridge, a further restriction is made against newspapermen who have won in any national tournament.

The trophies for the Atlantic National have been donated by Douglas Paige, for the teams of four, Joseph E. Ridder for pairs, P. Hal Sims and George Tilton for mixed pairs and Mrs. Josephine Culbertson for the newspapermen's match.

Events Scheduled.

The following is the calendar of events:

Tuesday, January 28—Evening, open pair, first qualifying round, open duplicate game.

Wednesday, January 29—Afternoon, team of four, elimination round; open duplicate game; evening, open pair, second qualifying round; open duplicate game.

Thursday, January 30—Afternoon, team of 4, first knockout round; open duplicate game; evening, open pair, first final round, newspapermen's pair championship; open duplicate game.

Friday, January 31—Afternoon, team of 4, second knockout round; open duplicate game; evening, open pair, final session; consolation cup contest; newspapermen's pair championship; open duplicate game.

Saturday, February 1—Afternoon, mixed pair, first session; evening, mixed pair, second session.

Sunday, February 2—Afternoon, mixed pair, final session (if necessary); evening, team of four semi-finals.

Monday, February 3—Final matches to be arranged to suit contestants.

Contract Bridge games and lessons every afternoon and evening—supervised play—card parties. Vanderbilt Bridge Studio, 1330 Conn. Ave. NO. 6483.

Burlington House Exhibition of Chinese Art Prized for Its Many Treasures of Ages

Objects Lent by Nanking Secreted for Long Years

Other Rich Entries on Display in England Come From America and Other Nations to Create Comprehensive International Collection.

This article is written in particular reference to the International Exhibition of Chinese Art at Burlington House, London, and is illustrated by photographs of the exhibits.

By Harold Rhodenbaugh.

In the year 1570 there was organized in Soochow an exhibition of Chinese art treasures lent by the four principal families of the Province of Kiangsu. It was a small but choice exhibition. The loans included a Chou bronze Wen Wang censer, an ancient lute of white jade, a Kuan-ware incense burner of the Sung dynasty and, most significant of the exhibits, the "Admonitions of the Instructress," Ku K'aichich, the famous scroll which is now in the British Museum.

A writer of that time who was a visitor to the Soochow exhibition, after a brief description of the display, wrote in what might today be called his "news story:"

"Thrice lucky am I to have seen in one day so many rare and wonderful objects!"

If that writer were to visit the Burlington House, London, today, he would see an exhibition of Chinese art which would easily render him quite wordless, for this mammoth show, gathered from over the world, contains art objects from a total of not just 4 families, but from more than 240 contributors. The exhibits number more than 3,000. Truly it is the most magnificent exhibit of Chinese art yet assembled. In this great gathering are many "rare and wonderful objects."

Government Collection.

The nucleus of the collection is the magnificent contribution made by the Chinese National Government of some 800 works of art. They were selected from a vast assemblage of imperial treasures from the Forbidden City, which are now stored in some 20,000 cases in Shanghai. The treasures lent by the Chinese government represent a small portion of a highly prized national heritage.

Until the fall of the Manchu dynasty they formed part of the property of the ruling emperor and as such were stored in the Winter Palace in Peking. They were seldom seen by anyone, never by foreigners; they were, in fact "lost" to the world. The Chinese government in the pursuit of its enlightened policy, has taken the unprecedented step of sending over to England some of these precious relics. At the close of the exhibition the treasures will be returned to China, and it is not probable that they will be again shown for many years.

The Chinese contribution forms the axis, as it were, round which the exhibition revolves. But it is an international exhibition and the international character of the display is apparent from the sources from which the exhibits have been derived.

The King and Queen of England lent a number of treasures and the Emperor of Japan contributed from the Japanese Imperial Collection as well as from the Imperial Household Museum at Tokyo.

Americans Contribute.

In addition, governments, public institutions and private collectors in this country, as well as many other countries, lent bronze, jade, pottery and porcelain art objects for the exhibition.

The present exhibition is being held under direct sponsorship of the British government in association with the government of China.

It has long been known that Chinese objects of art do not lend themselves to exhibition en masse. China has for centuries suffered from the vicissitudes of war, invasions and internecine conflicts. The sense of insecurity which resulted gave rise to the tradition of art lovers acquiring objects of portable size and cherishing them secretly. The evolution of Chinese art has been largely influenced by this tradition. Artists and craftsmen cultivated their talents in the creation of small objects, easy of concealment.

Hence we find today so many of the artistic treasures of China diminutive in size but of great beauty and refinement. Moreover, the true Chinese collector rarely shows his treasures. If they are shown at all, they are shown only to privileged and knowledgeable guests. The occasion is always one of ceremony, and each object is separately and lovingly examined.

This system could not be used, of course, in the Burlington Gallery, since hundreds of thousands are expected to visit the exhibition which will continue for several more months.

The Chinese have an expression for doing things in a hurry—"tsou ma k'an hua"— meaning, literally, "riding a horse, viewing flowers," which means "viewing flowers while galloping." Officials of the Burlington House are hopeful that people who visit the Chinese exhibition are careful not to see this vast exhibition in such a hurried fashion.

The exhibition, as a whole, illustrates Chinese art from the dawn of its history, or rather, from the dawn of its known history. Among them are the bronzes of the Shang-Yin period of the world's history, dating approximately from 1766 to 1122 B. C. These famed bronzes, as well as many other art objects produced during the centuries of China's history, assembled at Burlington House, are now affording students a remarkable opportunity to resolve a few of the vexing problems of art history.

Those American who visit England will have until the first of April to see this vast exhibition of Chinese art.

Malvina Hoffman Bronzes Exhibited In Explorers Hall

The most unusual current exhibition in Washington is that of the bronzes of Malvina Hoffman, noted sculptor, now being shown in Explorers Hall of the National Geographic Society Building on Sixteenth street.

These bronzes, pictures of some of which are shown on the opposite page, are the result of a number of years' intensive effort over the world by Miss Hoffman, who has been a sculptor since she was 22 years old, since then devoting most of her time to the art.

The bronzes represent probably Miss Hoffman's most comprehensive undertaking. In the late twenties she was commissioned by the Field Museum of Chicago to create a large number of bronzes depicting the "Races of Man."

The exhibit in Explorers Hall at the geographic society is but a small part of the work Miss Hoffman has completed, but is a striking display of her power as a master sculptor.

Carroll's Art On Exhibit At New York

Some at Rehn Galleries Never Before Placed on Public View.

Collection Is Described as Stimulating and Characteristic.

By Alice Graeme.

New York City.—The exhibition of John Carroll's work on view at the Rhen Galleries here until February is of paintings and drawings done in the last three years. Some of the pictures already are well known, some have been lent from private collections, and others are seen for the first time. It is a stimulating show and one thoroughly characteristic of the artist's work.

Among those who see Carrol's paintings there is generally a decided reaction either for or against him as a painter. His style is too personal and individual not to make people take sides, and one can understand how he could arouse either a great enthusiasm or be met with complete lack of understanding.

To his admirers there is an elusive and haunting charm in all of Carroll's work. His power to point the subtleties of character and to create about his figures a mood of mystic beauty, is one that few modern painters can surpass.

Model in Varied Moods.

In many of the heads and figure studies the piquant face of the same model appears in varying moods and costumes. There could be no more sensitive and delicate portrait than in "Lilies of the Valley." The long, tenuous fingers of the young girl are holding a few sprays of the white flowers, and her amazing black lashes sweep down on the softest of cheeks in dark half-moons. She wears in her light hair a ribbon of a color that Carroll often likes to use—the palest possible blue.

The whole picture is restrained and contemplative, yet with a beauty altogether compelling and moving. In "Pinky," lent by Robert Tannahill, there is the same small face, set off in this with a most ethereal white collar. The large portrait "White Lace," is one of Carroll's most distinguished pieces, and a picture which carries the authority of fine painting. The "Woman in White" of Picasso has a certain similarity with this picture, but there is a clarity here that is not found in the Picasso.

Besides these pictures which are painted with an unusual and very personal use of white and the grayish register of his palette there are a few in much warmer and stronger colors. It makes a pleasant variety to the show to feel this change.

There is "Astra," with reddish flesh tones and a strange use of bright blue patches in a gray sky, and "Little Boy," and "The Christening" among others, with the new warmth of color.

Background of Blue.

In the latter, against a sapphire blue background the heads of the mother and child are drawn with the soft hair of each, so alike, and the two pair of hands, woven into a design of great strength. The "Little Boy" is perhaps one of the finest pictures in the show—it is painted with such feeling and consummate skill. The child, round-shouldered in his little black coat, has an appealingly disarranged head of flaxen hair. There is an undercurrent of something very wistful and mystic in the picture.

Carroll has a farm in upper New York, where he rides with the local hunt, and has painted a number of pictures of the hunting field. In "The Huntsman," a rider galloping in the midst of a pack of hounds, he has a good design and composition. However, Mr. Carroll, one hears, has often difficulty in reconciling artist and hunter. He knows, for example, no hunter would approach the hounds in full cry, but here the artist apparently won out, for the success of the design. In "Grey Morning" he has a dark landscape, with a small hunting group in the center, a picture rather different from his others.

The "Cowboy's Dream," about which there has been much written and said, is also on view. The subject is of a white bull, a very world-weary bull, carrying on his back a young and child-like Europa. The apparition is indeed a startling one, but here is certainly a fresh handling of the allegorical story and the picture is adventurous and well painted.

"Picnic" Is Festive.

For very lightness of touch and a joyous, festive mood, his "Picnic" is a picture of great attraction. The theme is simple—two figures reclining in a summer glade, suffused with the green-yellow light of trees and sunshine and the suggested depths of the forest around them.

The group of drawings, many of which are studies for the larger oils, are an interesting footnote to the exhibition. Carroll has a fine, swift way of using his line, and his mood is easily expressed in a brief caligraphy. Mr. Rehn has assembled a generous number of Carroll's pictures—portraits, landscapes and figure studies, and there is ample opportunity to see the latest work of a man who has become one of the most known and discussed of the modernists.

Lahey Paintings Put on Exhibit With Etchings

His Water Colors Included In Display on View in Corcoran Gallery.

An exhibition of oil paintings, water colors and etchings, the work of Richard Lahey, the new principal of the Corcoran School of Art, has been hung in the southeast salon on the second floor of the Corcoran Gallery. It includes a small, but representative, collection of the paintings of Mr. Lahey for ten years or more. Much of his recent work is of landscapes, although a great deal of his artistic distinction has been won through his portraits and figure compositions.

Mr. Lahey, in commenting on his own exhibition, has pointed out that he has striven in his recent work for color effects in both oils and water colors. That he has been successful in this is attested by the landscapes and still life now on exhibition. In his early works there was more color restraint apparent.

Mr. Lahey's versatility in the use of different mediums and variety of theme is one of the outstanding conclusions to be drawn from the present exhibition. He displays a certain mastery not always found in artists who do not confine their efforts to one medium. While not following every passing art fad Mr. Lahey displays a well balanced progressive spirit valuable without doubt in his new post in the always conservative Corcoran Art institution.

Free of Conventional.

In his portraits Mr. Lahey exhibits a freedom from conventional bounds in his posings and treatment of backgrounds. Interest in his portraits in the present show centers around a portrait, "Carlotta," which is of Mr. Lahey's young wife, a sculptress who is known as Carlotta Gonzales.

Another portrait which has received favorable comment is "of Mary L. Tonetti, sculptress. In striking contrast a circus scene, painted at Jersey City and a skating scene are hung side by side.

Virility and strength distinguish Mr. Lahey's water colors. Those in the present exhibition range from still life, landscapes, to marines and figure compositions and portraits.

Born in Jersey city 43 years ago, Mr. Lahey studied at the Art Students League in New York City. He was a pupil of Robert Henri and George R. Bridgman. In 1925 he won the attention of the art world by winning the Tuthill prize of the Art Institute of Chicago and the Beck gold medal of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia.

Traveled Extensively.

Mr. Lahey has also traveled extensively abroad in Europe and has painted in England, France, Italy and Spain. His chief interest, however, is in the development and conservation of American art and ideals.

Mr. Lahey is represented by oil paintings, water colors and etchings in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, Whitney Museum of American Art, Detroit Institute of Art, the New York Public Library, Newark Public Libraries, the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, the Addison Gallery of American Art and in many private collections.

He is a leader in a number of important art organizations, including the American Society of Painters, Sculptors and Gravers, the Century Association, American Print Makers, American Fine Arts Society and Salons of America. Before coming to Washington he was a member of the Minneapolis Institute of Arts.

The exhibition at the Corcoran Gallery of Art will remain open through next Sunday.

Art work of Helen F. Collison will be displayed beginning today to February 2 in the headquarters of the District of Columbia League of American Penwomen, Burlington Hotel. A tea this afternoon from 3 to 6 p. m. will be attended by the artist.

An exhibit of Genre paintings, from the fifteenth to twentieth centuries, is now being shown at the Howard University Gallery of Art, to continue to January 18.

Studio Extends Loan Exhibition Until Thursday

Unprecedented attendance at the loan exhibition of paintings from the Museum of Modern Art of New York City is necessitating holding over the show at the Studio House through Thursday, it is announced.

The sculpture show, which has been displayed at the Junior League headquarters in conjunction with the paintings at the Studio House are being returned to the Museum of Modern Art and are no longer being shown.

There has been a great deal of interest in the paintings in the loan exhibition, which includes work of Gauguin, Derain, Picasso, Matisse, Redon and Modigliani, known to be among the greatest of painters during the past few decades of modern painting.

. . . Art Magazines

Many writers have busied themselves from time to time on the fascinating Van Gogh theme, and now Gertrude R. Benson offers something new in an article, "Exploding the Van Gogh Myth," in the January issue of the American Magazine of Art, published in Washington.

Mrs. Benson suggest that much too much space has been given to stories about the "mad" side of the well-known painter, rather than to study of the real Vincent, "the social visionary, the brilliantly lucid thinker, the revolutionary artist who speaks so vividly for himself in his work and in those extraordinary documents, the letters to his younger brother, Theo." This is very true, of course, for most writers have spent their time spinning tales of macabre meaning, in the fashion of Poe, using "poor, poor Vincent" as their theme. Mrs. Benson soundly urges that Van Gogh be allowed to tell his own story through his paintings, and anyone who saw them at the recent show at the Muesum of Modern Art in New York City will readily grant that Van Gogh was first of all a master of painting—and but little else matters, of course.

With the January issue, the Geographical Magazine, of London, has started a new policy of publishing, from time to time, groups of color illustrations in this already interesting publication. The color plates in the current issue are of paintings by the Belgian artist, M. Alfred Jonniaux, who has gained considerable attention in interpreting the Moroccan scene. Supplementing the color plates are a number of photographs of the usual interesting style of the magazine descriptive of scenes in Morocco.

Art in New York City

Paintings by Adolphe Borie, including a group of experimental pictures, are now on exhibition at the Marie Sterner Galleries, 9 East Fifty-seventh street, New York City, to continue to January 25.

Also at the Marie Sterner Galleries are stage sets and costumes disegned and executed by Vincente Minelli for several stage shows. This exhibit also continues to January 25.

The Whitney Museum of American Art, 10 West Eighth street, New York City, announces its second biennial exhibition Part 1, consisting of sculpture, drawings and prints, to continue to February 13.

Wax sculptures in color by the noted Mexican satirist, Luis Hidalgo, are at the Arden Gallery, 460 Park avenue, New York City, to continue to February 14.

Water color paintings made in all parts of Spain by Wells M. Sawyer, formerly of Washington, are being shown at the Feragil Gallery in New York. Mr. Sawyer, who for more than 40 years has been a member of the Society of Washington Artists, has lived in Spain for the past decade. His Spanish paintings have been exhibited in the Spanish National Gallery of Modern Art, in Madrid; the Gallery of the Society of the Friends of the Country, Malaga, our own National Gallery of Art in Washington and in other galleries.

His work in oil and water colors interpreting Spain has been extensively reviewed in both Spanish and American magazines and other publications.

Macbeth Gallery, 11 East Fifty-seventh street, New York City, is showing the centennial exhibition of paintings by Homer D. Martin.

The highly interesting subjective painting of Alexander Brook is being seen by the public at the Downtown Gallery, 113 West Thirteenth street, New York City, the show continuing to Saturday. Brook is considered to be one of the leading younger artists of today in this country.

Announcement is made by the American Academy in Rome, 101 Park avenue, New York City, of its annual competition for fellowships in the finer arts and classical studies. Entries are to be received until February 1 and are for fellowships in architecture, landscape architecture, painting and musical composition.

Among current exhibitions is one (at the Valentine Gallery) of nine oil paintings which were sold between 1910 and 1925 for a total of well under $1,000, but now are valued by the owners at approximately $250,000.

The artists represented are Matisse, Picasso, Derain and the late Henri Rousseau and Modigliani.

A further step toward establishment of the motion picture on the plane of an "art" was taken here during the last week when the Museum of Modern Art offered its first program representative of the history of film development.

Six early movies, selected and edited from an educational point of view were shown in chronological sequence. The same program, arranged by the museum's film library, which was established on a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation, will be offered for showing in other parts of the country.

Preceded by a flurry of protest over restrictions placed upon it, the municipal art committee of New York opened its temporary galleries recently.

The purpose of the project was described as "to give resident artists of the city of greater New York a gallery they may use to show their work." It was described as the first of its kind in any city and an experiment upon the success of which might depend plans for a permanent municipal art center to be conducted on a non-commercial community basis.

Majority to Be Seen in Gallery of Washington Arts Club Are Portraits.

Eighteen oil paintings by Hans Schlereth and 12 paintings in the same medium by Alan Page Favelle are on exhibition in the gallery and reception room at the Washington Arts Club. The majority of the paintings are of portraits or figure compositions.

A portrait of his old master, Prof. Carl von Marr, president of the Munich Academy of Fine Arts, is a feature of his exhibition, and other portraits include those of Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College, of Easton, Pa.; Daniel C. Roper, the late Walter R. McCoy and Judge Daniel W. O'Donoghue, Mrs. Lewis Clephane, Mrs. Hugo Einstein, Mrs. G. L. Munter.

Mr. Schlereth was born in Bavaria and has been a member of the art colony of Washington for the past ten years. In that time he has had a number of exhibitions in Washington art centers including a one-man show at the Corcoran Gallery of Art.

He has painted many distinguished members of the Washington and Federal judiciary, Cabinet officers and other men and women of distinction.

Mr. Favelle has returned recently from a year's study in Europe under the Hiram Gee Fellowship award from Syracuse University. He received the Purchase Award in the Independent Artists Show in 1935. He was represented in the autumn exhibition at the Phillips Memorial Gallery.

. . . Camera

Conducted by Rho.

Continuing on the subject of snow pictures, care must be used in operating the camera, otherwise the best of efforts will result in a waste of film.

Most important is to take the storm against a dark background, and as a result the falling, swirling snowflakes will be silhouetted. Then, too, you must choose the right sort of snowfall. This means watching for a storm that releases those big snowflakes—the bigger the better.

This kind of snow comes in a storm which occurs with but little wind, when the temperature is at or close to freezing point.

Another important point is the matter of distance. Don't stand more than 50 feet from the dark background, either building or trees, against which you are to take your snowstorm. The fewer snowflakes you get, the better. Next, get a little life into the scene, meaning people passing on the street bent under their umbrellas or wrapped tightly in their overcoats, hurrying to get out of the snow.

As for the setting of the camera, the lens should be focused on the people in the picture, not the building or background. Wet set focus cameras use the largest stop, and click the shutter. If you have a more elaborate camera, the aperture should not be smaller than f.8 with a shutter speed of 1-25 second. Slower speeds can be used to get more motion into the movement of the flakes—so one can make the storm look like a raging blizzard.

A group of paintings and miniature sculptures dealing with activities of the Department of Interior is now being prepared for display in the museum of the new Interior Building, which will be completed in December. Included will be many maps charts and picturesque dioramas.

Informal Discussions On Modern Art Planned

A new series of informal discussions on modern art is announced for the Phillips Memorial Gallery, to be given by Mr. E. Law Watkins, assistant director of the gallery. The first lecture will be on Wednesday, January 22, at 5 p. m. in the gallery, with the famed Phillips collection as a basis for discussion. The series will be made up of 8 lectures, given on Wednesdays until March 11.

Noted British Duo-Pianists Will Be Soloists With National Symphony Next Thursday

Dr. Kindler Will Devote Half of Program to Bach

Saint-Saens Centenary Marked by Performance of His Humorous Suite, "Carnival of the Animals;" Young People's Concert Tomorrow.

Ethel Bartlett and Rae Robertson, the eminent British duo-pianists, who are well remembered in Washington for their admirable artistry, will again be soloists with the National Symphony Orchestra Thursday afternoon at 4:45 in Constitution Hall. They will be heard in the Bach double concerto in C major and in the diverting suite, "Le Carneval des Animaux," by Saint-Saens.

The first half of the program will be devoted entirely to Bach, as Dr. Hans Kindler has chosen three orchestral transcriptions as fitting companions for the great concerto. The numbers which he has selected are the chorale-prelude, "Fervent Is My Longing," the adagio movement from the Toccata in C major for organ, and the Passacaglia and Fugue. The concert will close with Enescu's first Rumanian Rhapsody.

Bach wrote the double concerto while he was director of the Collegium Musicuum, and it is believed to have had its first performance at a meeting of that society. It is, however, a re-working of an earlier work for two violins and orchestra. It was immediately successful in its revised form, as its themes and contrapuntal figuration seemed to stand out in even sharper definition.

"Fervent Is My Longing" is one of the many preludes which Bach based on the familiar chorales or hymns of the German people. His fondness for these religious songs was so marked that he used their themes in the greater part of his church cantatas, and also in 18 long chorale-preludes for organ as well as in the shorter preludes in "The Little Organ Book." The Passacaglia and Fugue for organ has been splendidly transcribed for orchestra by Leopold Stokowski.

Humorous Saint-Saens.

In commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Camille Saint-Saens, Dr. Kindler requested the soloists on Thursday's program to play "The Carnival of the Animals." This humorous suite, filled with many a quip and jest, was only privately performed during the composer's life and the score was not published until after his death. One number, "The Swan," for violoncello solo, was published by Saint-Saens, and is known the world around in many versions.

The suite contains the following numbers: Introduction and Royal March of the Lion, Hens and Cocks, Wild Asses, Tortoises, the Elephant, Kangaroos, Aquarium, Persons with Long Ears, The Cuckoo in the Deep Woods, Aviary, Pianists, Fossils, the Swan, and Finale. In the "Fossils" section, one hears quotations from Rossini and other composers, and Saint-Saens even poked a little fun at himself with a theme from the "Danse Macabre."

George Enescu, who was born in Rumania in 1881, began his career as a talented boy violinist. He made many European tours as a recital virtuoso and has visited the United States several times in that capacity. He also developed no small ability as an orchestral conductor. His major interest, however, has always been the folk music of his native land, which he has utilized in his compositions. He has written two Rumanian Rhapsodies and other works for orchestra, chamber music and many pieces for violin and piano. He is now a resident of Paris, where Yehudi Menuhin studied with him several years ago.

Young People's Series.

Tomorrow afternoon the National Symphony presents the first program in the young people's series at 3:30 o'clock in Western High School; this program was played last Thursday and Friday in Central and Eastern High Schools.

On February 2 the orchestra will play a Brahms program in Constitution Hall with Myra Hess, the English pianist, as soloist. The works to be performed are the second symphony in D major, the B flat major piano concerto, and the "Tragic" overture.

The National Symphony Association will present on Monday night, February 3, a concert of chamber music by Brahms in Memorial Continental Hall. The artists will be Myra Hess, piano; Hans Kindler, violoncello; George Wargo, viola, and the Musical Art Quartet (Sascha Jacobsen, Paul Bernard, Louis Kievman and Marie Roemaet-Rosanov).

The compositions to be played are the sextet for strings in G major, Op. 36; the quartet for strings in A minor, Op. 51, and the trio in C minor for piano and strings, Op. 101.

National Opera To Give 'Lakme' Tuesday Night

Fioratura Soprano From Brazil in Title Role; St. Denis Ballet.

Leo Delibes' exotic opera, "Lakme," will be presented by the National Opera Asociation Tuesday night in Constitution Hall with a cast which includes Bidu Sayao, Brazilian fioratura soprano, in the title role; Armand Tokatyan, tenor, as Gerald; Edouard Albion, barytone, as Nikalantha; Mlle. Tierce, contralto, as Mallika, and John Rockwood, barytone, as Frederick.

Ruth St. Denis is sending a section of her ballet company for the performance; the dancers will wear authentic East Indian costumes and jewelry collected by her while she was studying in the Orient. Miss St. Denis is also costuming Lakme and Mallika.

Enrica Clay Dillon is in charge of the stage production of the opera, the first of a series the Association plans for the Capital. The problem which confronts her is a difficult one, for Constitution Hall has no proscenium, no curtain, no wings, and no facilities for scenic sets. She has worked out a scheme, however, by which only a few accessories will be used with lighting devices for the creation of theatrical illusion.

Edouard Albion, co-director of the association, made his debut in "Lohengrin" with the Montreal Opera Co. Later he sang with Nordica at the Maine Festival, and made a transcontinental tour with Luisa Tetrazzini. Abandoning his career, he organized the Washington Opera Co., which produced operas here for ten seasons. During the last five years he has been concertizing in the Southern States and laying plans for the reorganization of what is now the National Opera Association.

"Lakme" is a romantic opera in three acts with a libretto by Goudinet and Gille based on Pierre Loti's novel, "Le Mariage de Loti." It was first performed in the Paris Opera Comique on April 4, 1883, and was presented the same year in the United States by the Abbot Opera Co. The scene of the opera is India, and the time about 1880. The plot concerns a romance between Lakme, the beautiful daughter of a Hindu priest, Nikalantha, and Gerald, a British army officer.

On Saturday afternoon the Association will present Humperdinck's fairy-tale opera, "Haensel und Gretal," in English with a cast of young singers from the National Music League. The four principal roles will be sung by Cecile Sherman, Marian Steele, Edith Piper and John Guerney.

Benefit Recital.

Frances Nash, pianist, will give a recital on Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the home of Mrs. Joseph Leiter for the benefit of the Georgetown Visitation Convent Alumnae Fund. Her program will include "Sospiro" (Liszt), Etude, Op. 10, No. 9; Nocturne, Op. 62, No. 2; Scherzo in C sharp minor (Chopin), "Evocacion" (Albeniz), "Minstrels" (Debussy), "Jeux d'eau" (Ravel), and "Etude en forme de valse" (Saint-Saens).

Composer Will Be the Guest Conductor for Concert on Tuesday Night.

Gustave Strube, distinguished American composer, will be guest conductor of the U. S. Navy Band Orchestra at the concert on Tuesday night at 8 o'clock in the sail loft. A native of Germany, Dr. Strube came to the United States in 1890 as a first violinist in the Boston Orchestra, a position which he held until 1913. During that period he composed many works. For 12 years he was conductor of the Boston "pop" concerts.

Since 1913 Dr. Strube has taught harmony, counterpoint and composition at the Peabory Conservatory, and he was for some time conductor of the Baltimore Orchestra. His composition include a three-act opera, "Ramona;" two symphonies, two symphonic poems, three violin concerti, sonatas, cantatas, and many violin pieces.

At Tuesday night's concert Dr. Strube will conduct the following numbers: March from "Tannhaeuser" (Wagner), "Elegie" and "Serenade" from Suite for String Orchestra, Op. 9 (Strube), Overture to "Oberon" (Weber), March, "Black Bess' (Strube), and "Serenade (Strube).

Beginning its American tour in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, on Tuesday night, the Kurt Jooss Ballet will fill many engagements on the road before reaching Washington for a single performance in the National Theater on Friday afternoon, February 21, under the management of Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey. The famous "Green Table" will be included in the program.

Prized Russian Operas Scheduled Next Sunday

Art of Musical Russia Will Present Rimski-Korsakov's Works at Matinee and Evening Performances in National Theater.

Two of Russia's most beautiful operas, Rimski-Korsakov's "Le Coq d"Or" and Musorgski's "Boris Godunov," will be presented by the Art of Musical Russia next Sunday afternoon and evening in the National Theater, under the management of William A. Albaugh. The matinee performance begins at 2 o'clock and the evening curtain will rise at 8.

The organization presenting these works has established a reputation for fine production and devotes itself entirely to Russian operas, with the exception of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Iolantha." Last year it introduced to this country the sensational "Lady Macbeth of Mtzensk" by the young Soviet composer, Dmitri Shostakovich.

Cast as Principals.

Principal roles in "Le Coq d'Or" will be sung by Marguerite Hawkins, American soprano, who will be heard as the Queen of Shemakhan, and Alexis Cherkasski, young Russian barytone, who will take the part of King Dodon. Eugene Fuerst will conduct.

In "Boris Godunov," George Dubrovski will sing the title role, supported by Ivan Ivantzov as Gregori (the false Dmitri), Edwina Eustis as Marina, Mikhail Shvetz as Varlaam, and Ivan Velikanov as Prince Shuiski. Alexander Smallens will conduct.

Rimski-Korsakov did not live to see the first performance of his last opera, "Zolotoi Petushok" (in French, "Le Coq d'Or;" in English, "The Golden Cockerel"). Suspecting subversive propaganda behind the fantastic and ironical legend, the censor refused to allow its production. The disappointment is believed to have hastened the composer's death, which occurred June 8, 1908, from an acute attack of angina pectoris. The premiere of the opera took place about two years later in Zimin's private theater in Moscow.

First Performance.

On March 6, 1918, the opera was first performed in the United States by the Metropolitan Opera Co., and it was sung in French. It was produced as a pantomime-opera, arranged by Mikhail Fokin, in which members of the ballet enacted the movements of the characters on the stage, while the singers were placed on stands near the proscenium. The reason for this division of labor was the exceptional difficulties of the action and music, although such a procedure had never been suggested by the composer. In Washington the opera will be presented as it was originally designed.

Musorgski's masterpiece, "Boris Godunov," has its first performance January 24, 1874, in the Maryinski Theater, St. Petersburg. It was not until November 19, 1913, that it was first heard in this country, with Feodor Shalyapin singing the title role in the Metropolitan Opera House.

Heifetz Will Use His Best Violins In Recital Here

Heifetz brings with him today two of his best violins, a Guarnerius (1742) and a Stradivarius (1731). The Guarnerius is known as the "David" because it was for many years the favorite instrument of Ferdinand David; it was subsequently owned by August Wilhelmj and Pablo Sarasate. The Stradivarius is specially prized by Heifetz because it was loaned to him by a New York family when he began his career in the United States. Later on, when he had earned enough money, he purchased it.

The Lisa Gardiner Dancers, assisted by Mikhail Nikholov, a former dancing partner of Anna Pavlova, will be seen in a succession of their popular numbers. The program will close with a repetition of LaSalle Spier's amusing pantomime, "The Afternoon of a Four," enacted by Fillis Speich, Marjorie McGee, Margery Beall and Alice Louise Hunter.

Bailey F. Alart was born in 1892 in Brooklyn, N. Y. He began conducting theater orchestras at the age of 18. After a long experience in the United States and Canada, he came to Washington in 1923 as musical director at the Ambassador. Later he conducted at the Tivoli and the Rialto Theaters. For several years he was active in theatrical work in Florida, Louisiana and Texas. As a composer he wrote and produced two operettas, "Frantzi" and "The Little Modiste."

Returning to Washington in 1933, he volunteered his services to the Community Center Department as organizer and conductor of an amateur orchestra. Moreover, he offered the use of his large and valuable library of orchestral scores. He explained that the sound pictures had reduced the number of musical directors in theaters, that he was then employed in a wholly different field of work, but that he wished to keep up his musical activity and would be glad to give his evenings to training an orchestra.

For years the Community Center Department had desired to form an orchestra, but it had no funds either for the engagement of a conductor or for the purchase of music. Mr. Alart's generous offer was accepted with the deepest gratitude. Organized in January of 1934, the orchestra has met weekly in Central High School, with an extra night of rehearsal for the string section.

The orchestra, now numbering some 90 musicians, is non-professional in status. Its members receive no compensation, and play solely for the love of music. Since Mr. Alart was stricken with his fatal illness in June of last year, the orchestra has been directed by Samuel T. Ford.

The serious problem which confronts the orchestra is the library of music, without which it can not continue its work. This library must be sold to settle Mr. Alart's estate. Neither the musicians nor the Community Center Department possess the means to make an offer for it. The proceeds of the entertainment to be given on January 28 will be devoted to that purpose, and it is hoped public-spirited citizens will contribute to a fund for the purchase of the scores as a fitting recognition of Mr. Alart's unselfish service to the city.

Tuneful 'Porgy' Made Striking On New Discs

Lawrence Tibbett Singing With Helen Jepson on Victor Presentation.

"And is that tune you're whistling from 'Porgy and Bess?'" an associate wanted to know.

"Why, yes," we who had for the moment given up our conscious effort to get "that tune" out of our head, answered.

"Is it 'Bess, You Is My Woman Now?'" was the next question.

"That's right," we replied, feeling flattered, "Say how did you like the opera?"

And like all "Porgy and Bess" discussions, much more conversation followed. This much has been quoted for the sake of the "Bess, You Is My Woman" number.

That tune, a duet between the two title role singers, had the misfortune of not coming off to the best advantage in the current Theater Guild production. And we weren't whistling it as the aftermath of a visit to the Alvin Theater of Fifty-third street. We had been playing the records in the new album of 'Porgy and Bess' highlights just released by Victor.

Tibbett and Jepson.

In the hands of Lawrence Tibbett, who should be in the opera if it ever moves into the Metropolitan, and Helen Jepson, the soprano, the duet has fared better. Their voices blend so well, the whole song takes on new strength, and appears after all to deserve a place with the hit tunes, "I Got Plenty of Nuttin'," and "It Ain't Necessarily So."

(This is no sweeping criticism of Todd Duncan and Anne Brown, the Porgy and Bess, of the New York production. Only in this collaboration did they disclose certain vocal weaknesses. For some reason their voices didn't fit.)

As it is "Bess, You Is My Woman" turns out to be one of the opera's strong spots, and for it Mr. Gershwin has composed some of his most tightly integrated music.

The album has other satisfactory items. Mr. Tibbett, forsaking Porgy to become Sportin' Life, (Mephistopheles in a lavender suit) sings "It Aint Necessarily So" so clearly that is is possible to enjoy all of Ira Gershwin's choice lines. We caught for the first time:

"Now Jonah he lived in de whale
For he made his home in Dat Fish's abdomen.
Now Jonah he lived in de whale."

Tibbett Triumphs.

Tibbet does best though in Porgy's big number, "I got Plenty of Nuttin." It is a fine song. If Tibbett were to be in the opera I suppose he'd be the murderer-lover, Crown. The singer suggests what gusto he would put into the role in "A Woman is a Sometime Thing," which fills another record surface.

Miss Jepson appears in the opening lullaby, "Summertime," and back of her soprano voice, we hear, as in the opera, the side remarks of the crapshooters.

The album also contains the "Buzzard Song" (Tibbett) and "Where Is My Bess," the cry of the heartbroken Porgy when in the final scene Bess has abandoned him (Tibbett).

Alexander Smallens, of the opera personnel, conducts the orchestra that accompanies. Altogether the album represents a spirited, and very satisfactory souvenir of Mr. Gershwin's much discussed work.

Johann Strauss' brother, Josef, like other members of the family, wrote waltzes. One of them, called "Aquarellen," has been brought to us on Victor No. 8867. It's played by Ormandy and the Minneapolis Orchestra. The shading is truly Viennese. "Aquarellen" means water colors.

Puccini fans will be interested in two newly recorded arias from "La Boheme." On the first side is "O Soave Fanciulla," and on the the Rodolfo and Mimi first act duet, and on the other is the famous tenor aria, "Che Gelida Manina." The artists are Ziliani-Fevero and Allessandro Ziliani, of the La Sacala, Milan.

Kathryn Meisle Will Sing Here With Cellist

Kathryn Meisle, American contralto of the Metropolitan Opera, and Emanuel Feuermann, the great Austrian violoncellist, will be presented by Mrs. Lawrence Townsend in a joint recital on Wednesday morning at 11:15 in the Mayflower ballroom. Neither of these artists needs encomistic introduction to local concertgoers, as Miss Meisle has ben heard here on more than one occasion, and Mr. Feuermann made his Washington debut last season at one of Mrs. Townsend's musicales.

Miss Meisle's share of the program is as follows: Tu lo sai (Torelli), Minuette allegro (Gaffi), "Schwer liegt auf dem Harzen" from "Nadeschda" (Goring Thomas), Provenzalisches Lied (Schumann), Ich trage meine Minne, Schlechtes Wetter, Sie wissen's nicht (Richard Strauss), Der Erlkoenig (Schubert), As Fair Is She as Noonday Light (Rakhmaninov), Homeland Mine (Grechaninov), Revery (Arenski), Les Lilles de Cadix (Delibes). Stuart Ross will be the accompanist.

Mr. Feuermann, accompanied by Wolfgang Rebner, will play Sonata No. 3 in G minor (Bach), Variations in E flat major on a Theme by Mozart (Bethoven), "Prayer" Ernest Bloch), Allegro Spirituoso (Senallie), Zigeunerweisen (Sarasate).

Gen. Chaney Lists Randolph Field Training Problems Incident to Bigger Air Corps

3d Area Staff Prepares To Train 60 Reservists

Course for Officers Will Be in Form of School of Instruction and Practical Training in Mobilization; Other Notes on Assignments.

Preparations are now being made by the headquarters of Third Corps Area to train approximately 60 reserve officers of the arms. The training will be in the form of a school of instruction and practical training in mobilization, and will include a study of the current War Department mobilization plan, the Third Corps Area mobilization plan and the plans of the Corps Area Service Command.

The training will take place at headquarters of the Third Corps Area located at Baltimore during the period of March 1 to 14, and will be limited to reserve officers of the grades of captain and first lieutenants of the Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, Coast Artillery, Air Corps, Signal Corps and the Corps of Engineers.

Final selection of officers will be made by the commanding general of the Third Corps Area in accordance with instructions recently published by his office, which provides that a minimum of 20 hours of inactive duty credit since June 30, 1935, including the completion of one extension school sub-course, will be required for consideration.

Reserve officers of the District of Columbia who meet the requirements for selection for such training must make application through military channels to the local headquarters in the Munitions Building.

An important change in Reserve Corps regulations has been announced effective July 1, governing reappointments in the Officers' Reserve Corps. The change deals with several means of becoming eligible for reappointment in the active reserve at the termination of a five-year appointment period. The change in question pertains to one of these means, and provides that a reserve officer may be eligible for reappointment provided he has demonstrated his interest in military affairs by having a written record of "satisfactory performance" of at least 200 hours of credits, of which at least 100 hours have been earned on an inactive duty status.

Officers may earn credits on an inactive duty status by Army extension course work, attendance at classes, administrative duties in connection with his unit, or active participation with troops on inactive duty trainnig; and for shorter or longer periods, 7 hours' credit for each full day of active day; provided efficiency report rating of at least satisfactory is obtained under "manner of performance" item on the efficiency report.

Beginning July 1, it will be seen that an officer can no longer be eligible for reappointment by merely attending two 14-day active duty training periods or the equivalent during his five-year appointment period. He must now, in order to render himself eligible for reappointment under the change, earn at least 100 hours of the required 200 hours by the inactive duty training period.

Purpose Defined.

The War Department has recently stated that the purpose of all training—active and inactive—of reserve officers is to maintain their fitness to perform their mobilization missions and to make due provision for appropriate advancement of the officers in the military profession.

Regulations do not require that an officer take both conference and extension courses. He is authorized to take either or both sets of courses at his own discretion. Hours of credit are used to show that an officer is maintaining his status as an active, studious officer. For this purpose he is required to earn within his five-year appointment term 200 hours, of which amount at least 100 must be earned on an inactive-duty staus. These inactive credits may be earned by attendance at authorized conference course. On these bases, an average of 20 hours of inactive status credits a year is required to maintain an officer's active status.

Assignments Changed.

The following changes of assignments have been made by the Third Corps Area headquarters during the past week: First Lieutenants Robert McGinn, Corps of Engineers, of 1744 P street northwest, and Francis S. Walker, of 1848 McGill terrace, are assigned to the 343d Engineers Regiment; Maj. William S. Covell, of 2006 Columbia road, is relieved from assignment to the 1340th Service Unit; First Lieut. Haven Nichols, C. A. C., of 812 Alabama avenue southeast, is assigned to the 913th Coast Artillery (AA) Regiment.

First Lieut. Daniel J. Ryan, adjutant general's department, of 41 Girard street northeast, is ordered to active duty for 14 days, beginning today, at headquarters, Third Corps Area.

Conferences Courses.

Inactive duty training conferences courses for officers of the following units or branches of the service will be held during this week, it was announced by the local headquarters. Four Hundred and Twenty-Eighth and 429th Infantry Regiments will assemble tomorrow evening; officers of the 320th Infantry Regiment, Tuesday evening; Military Intelligence, Wednesday; 306th Cavalry Regiment and Signal Corps officers, Thursday evening, and 343d Engineers, Friday.

Winter Weather Presents Task To 5th Battalion

Fleet Marine Corps Reserve Has Poor Quarters to Carry Out Routine.

The cold weather and heavy snows of the past winter in the District have served to emphasize the terrific handicap imposed upon the training of the Fifth Battalion, Fleet Marine Corps Reserve, in that this battalion has no armory worthy of the name.

All but two weeks of the training year are assigned to armory training. With no armory, the so-called training presents a problem that would challenge the ingenuity of any group of United States Marines.

The building which the Fifth Battalion apologetically refers to as its "armory" is a condemned office building at 458 Indiana avenue northwest, lent to the Marine Corps by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The building contains a series of small rooms distributed over three floors. As a lecture room the largest room in the building can barely accomodate one platoon.

Rooms All Too Small.

Not one of the rooms in the building is of sufficient size for the proper formation of a platoon. Various company headquarters rooms, all of the pitifully crowded with necessary field equipment, accommodate two small desks for the administrative paper work of the company commander and his company clerk.

For drills the members of each company form a single file up the various staircases, reach in to grab a rfie and fall in out in the street. Rifles are cleaned on nights other than drill nights in relays by platoons.

Weekly drills in the streets mean actual close order drills in the face of automobile and street-car traffic, at times ankle deep in snow and slush. Rain has long since ceased to be regarded as a difficulty. The Marines are used to that.

The building is not sufficiently modern or secure to justify the request for issuance of automatic infantry auxiliary weapons required for the training of a modern Marine Corps combat battalion.

Following the 1935 field-training period at Quantico, the Fifth Battalion was highly praised and commended. The official report of the board of observers placed the Fifth Battalion well at the head of other battalions, of which there are 13.

Battalion Applauded.

The battalion was highly praised by Maj. Gen. Charles A. Lyman, U. S. M. C., at that time commanding the Fleet Marine Force. The general and Col. Charles F. B. Price, U. S. M. C., commanding the famed Fifth Regiment, recommended the assignment of the Fifth Battalion as the Reserve Battalion of the Fifth Regiment.

Brig. Gen. Richard P. Williams, U. S. M. C., said of the Washington Battalion following the 1935 training camp, "of the various Reserve Battalions, the Fifth Battalion made the best showing and did the hardest work. It is an organization of which the District of Columbia may well be proud. The Fifth Battalion is beyond praise."

The Fifth Battalion, numbering 504, including the Naval Reserve Medical officers attached, is the largest of the Marine Corps Reserve battalions.

Not all of the units base at Washington. Headquarters, the band, Companies A, B, C and D hold forth at Washington.

Company E bases at Alexandria; Company F at Rockville, Company G at Roanoke.

"The fine record of the Fifth Battalion, in spite of the handicap of poor armory facilities," said Maj. Harvey L. Miller, F. M. C. R., commanding, yesterday, "recalls the story of the old-time pugilist who won a lot of hard battles although he did no training. 'I don't need to train to win,' said the old fighter.

"To which his manager replied, 'But you'd be a champion if you did train.'

"I wonder," concluded Maj. Miller, "how far up the ladder of Marines Corps efficiency the Fifth Battalion would climb if it had an armory worthy of the name."

Recognition Extended.

Federal recognition in the National Guard has been extended to Charles Elmo McPherren as a major general of the line, Forty-fifth division of the Oklahoma Guard, and to Gilson Don Light as a brigadier general of the Ohio National Guard.

Navy Assigns Two New Subs To the Atlantic

Porpoise and Shark Later in Summer Will Join Fleet in Pacific.

Secretary Swanson announced last week that the submarines U. S. S. Porpoise and U. S. S. Shark, the first vessels of the Roosevelt building program scheduled for completion, will operate in the Atlantic until late in the summer, when they will proceed to the West Coast to join the fleet. Upon reporting to the commander-in-chief they will be assigned to duty with the submarine force, United States fleet.

Schedules for their operations and the periods assigned for their shakedown cruise have been approved by Acting Chief of Naval Operations, Rear Admiral Joseph K. Taussig, U. S. N.

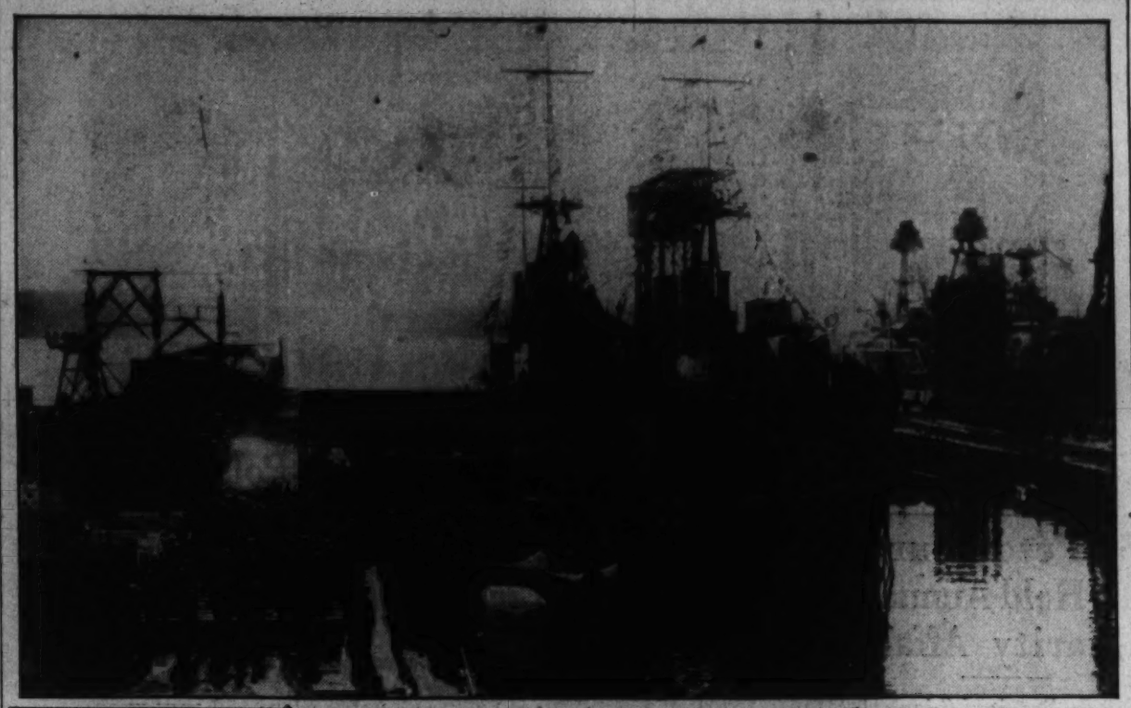
The U. S. S. Porpoise, built at the Portsmouth Navy Yard, was commissioned on August 15, under command of Lieut. Comdr. S. S. Murray, U. S. N. She was completed last week, the first of the naval vessels authorized by act of June, 1933.

The U. S. S. Shark, being constructed by the Electric Boat Co., New London, Conn., will be placed in commission on February 15, under command of Lieut. Charles J. Cater, U. S. N.

Both submarines, which are of 1,300 tons standard displacement each, will conduct trials and training operations before their departure for the West Coast.

Land Acquired.

Assistant Secretary of War Woodring has approved the purchase of 3,739 acres of land within the reservoir of the Fort Peck Dam at a cost of $17,714.79. The Government will take it over in May of 1937.



D. C. Aero Club Offering to Back Air Challengers

Financial Help Available Until May 1 for Any Pilot in This Area.

Plans to sponsor financially any pilot in the Washington area who attempts to bring an international record to the United States were made at the annual meeting of the Aero Club of Washington at National Aeronautic Association headquarters last Monday.

The offer, which holds until May 1 is for an attempt by any licensed pilot within a 20-mile radius of the District of Columbia for a record in any class or category with the exception of trial for maximum speed over a 3-kilometer course.

The Aero Club will defray all sanction and registration fees made by the Federation Aeronautique Internationale for official recognition of the record attempt, but will not pay the personal expenses of the pilot.

In making this offer, the Aero Club is establishing a precedent which it hopes will be followed by other organizations and which it is believed will go a long way towards maintaining American supremacy in world aeronautics.

A resolution was adopted giving the approval of the Aero Club to the McSwain bill to create a junior air reserve, now before the Military Affairs Committee of the House. The bill would provide a strong reserve of military pilots by organizing air corps reserve units on much the same basis as the Reserve Officers Training Corps and the Citizens' Military Training Camps.

Chester H. Warrington, president of the group, was re-elected. Other officers are as follows: Louis Inwood, first vice president; John F. Victory, second vice president; Richard Boutelle, third vice president; Allan M. Smythe, secretary; J. B. Peterson, treasurer; Rear Admiral E. S. Land, Dr. George W. Lewis, Adolf K. Barta and Dr. Roy E. Whitehead, trustees.

Andrews Requests Reserve of 152,000

A peace-time naval reserve of 152,000 men and 16,000 officers was recommended to Congress last week by Rear Admiral Adolphus Andrews, chief of the Bureau of Navigation. This would compare with the present strength of 8,900 officers and 33,255 men.

He told a House committee President Roosevelt had approved an increase of about $1,200,000 in next year's budget for expanding the reserve.

The committee is conducting hearings on a bill to increase the reserve to the full strength permitted under existing treaties.

Andrews asserted that in event of war the reserve personnel would have important roles, particularly during the first 120 days.

He recommended an expansion of Reserve Officer Training Corps regulations to permit 2,400 men instead of 1,200 from that group to affiliate themselves with the Navy. This idea was attributed by him to the President.

Officer's Mother Named To Sponsor U. S. S. Talbot

Mrs. Mary Talbot, of South Weymouth, Mass., Will Officiate at Ceremonies for Destroyer Now Under Construction in Boston.

Mrs. Mary Talbot, of 133 Pleasant street, South Weymouth, Mass., has been designated by Secretary Swanson as sponsor for destroyer No. 390, to be named U. S. S. Ralph Talbot, in honor of her son, the late Second Lieut. Ralph Talbot, United States Marine Corps.

No definite date has been set for the launching of this destroyer of 1,500 tons displacement, which is under construction at the Boston Navy Yard. This vessel was authorized by the Vinson-Trammell act and on January 1 was reported as being 18.8 per cent complete.

Talbot's Record.

Second Lieut. Talbot was born January 6, 1897, in South Weymouth, Mass. He enrolled on May 26, 1918, as a provisional second lieutenant, Marine Corps Reserve Flying Corps.

In the World War he participated in numerous air raids into enemy territory and on October 4, 1918, while on such a raid he was attacked by nine enemy scouts and in the fight that followed, shot down an enemy plane. On October 14, 1918 while on a raid over Pittham, Belgium, Lieut. Talbot's and one other plane became detached from the formation on account of engine trouble and were attacked by 12 enemy scouts.

During the severe fight that followed his plane shot down one of the enemy scouts. His observer was shot through the elbow and his gun jammed. He cleared the jam with one hand, while Lieut. Talbot maneuvered to gain time, and then returned to the fight. The observer fought until shot twice in the stomach and once in the hip.

His Final Fight.

When he collapsed, Lieut. Talbot attacked the nearest enemy scout with his front guns and shot him down. With his observer unconscious and his motor failing he dived to escape the balance of the enemy and crossed the German trenches at an altitude of 50 feet, landing at the nearest hospital and left his observer and returned to his aerodrome.

For this feat Lieut. Talbot was awarded the Navy Medal of Honor. On October 25, 1918, while attached to the ninth squadron day wing, northern bombing group, and while flying a DH-4 bombing plane, the machine struck a hump, capsized and caught fire and Lieut. Talbot being wedged in and unable to move was burned to death.

Army Expecting Delivery of 500 Planes in 1936

Secretary Dern Outlines Prospect of Expansion in Note to Capitol.

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Dern said last week the War Department expects delivery of more than 500 fighting planes this year, beginning with 20 this month and increasing steadily with each succeeding month.

The figures were contained in a letter to Chairman McSwain (Democrat), South Carolina, of the House Military Committee. Dern also noted improvements in performance of planes, saying:

"As an example I think I can assure you that the very near future will see the single-seat pursuit airplane with a top speed of over 300 miles per hour, with proportionate improvements in other types of airplanes with which the Army Air Corps is equipped."

The purpose of the letter was to advise the committee of progress under a system of competitive purchases or aircraft which replaced negotiated contracts about 18 months ago.

Dern said 685 planes have been contracted for under the new policy, that 10 have been delivered under the first contract and one each under several subsequent contracts.

While deliveries may seem slow, the Secretary said, the policy of competitive bidding has permitted a speeding up so that quantity deliveries are being made for tactical use "within something less than two years of the date of advertising."

"Such a rate of delivery," Dern said, "compares most favorably with that of foreign powers on which such information is available."

Coincidently, Representative O'Connell (Democrat), Rhode Island, proposed legislation authorizing construction of a 300-ton airship for military service to demonstrate the value of a large commercial ship for transporting and servicing military airplanes and as a means of protecting the Nation from aerial attacks. Such a ship would cost $6,000,000, O'Connell said.

Baltimore Heading Recruiting Column

Baltimore, Jan. 18.—With 143 recruits enlisted during December, Baltimore led the other four Army recruiting districts in the Third Corps area. The others and their totals were: Richmond, 138; Pittsburgh, 120; Harrisburg, 100, and Philadelphia, 85. Fort Belvoir, Va., with 31 recruits accepted, led the corps area Army posts during December.

Of the total of 811 recruits for the month the greatest number showed preference for the Infantry, 394. The enlistments in the other branches of the service were: Coast Artillery, 137; Medical Department, 64; Air Corps, 46; Quartermaster Corps, 43; Field Artillery, 36; Engineers, 35; Ordnance Department, 11; Cavalry, 9; Signal Corps, 7; Chemical Warfare Service, 6; Finance Department, 2, and the Detached Enlisted Men's List, 21.

Of the total 264 were enlisted for service in the Third Corps Area and 547 for outside assignment.

Flying 'West Point' Aims To Set Up Huge Reserve

Commander of Texas Center Tells How Service There Operates to Keep Squadrons Manned by Young Who Rotate to Civilian Status.

With Congressional leaders and military officials actively backing plans for an expansion of the Army Air Corps, the problem of securing qualified personnel and the training of young pilots assumes major importance. In the following article, Brig. Gen. James E. Chaney discusses this situation from the viewpoint of the commanding general of "The West Point of the Air." Gen. Chaney's article discusses the stages of instruction, types of airplanes flown and the future of the military pilot as well as the necessary qualifications and the procedure that should be followed in seeking entrance to Randolph Field.—Editor's Note.

By Brig. Gen. James E. Chaney, U. S. A., Air Corps, Commanding General, the Army Training Center.

To be effective, an air corps must have a large number of young combat pilots. The relative proportion of lieutenants to officers of higher grade in the Air Corps is approximately double that of any other arm. Therefore, to maintain the youth of the fighting squadrons, it is necessary to rotate young graduates of the training center through the combat squadrons and then return the bulk of them to civil life. This secures at the same time a pool of young trained military pilots in the Air Corps Reserve for immediate replacements in a major emergency.

The mission of the Air Corps Training Center is to turn out young military pilots competent to undertake the duties of a second lieutenant in a tactical squadron. It consists of the Primary Flying School located at Randolph Field, the Advanced Flying School located at Kelly Field, and the School of Aviation Medicine at Randolph Field. The course of instruction is one year, with eight months spent at the primary school and four months at the advanced school.

There are always three classes in the Training Center, two at the Primary School and one at the Advanced School, a new class entering every four months. At the Primary school the student spends four months on the Primary Stage and four months on the Basic Stage. The instruction on the Primary Stage is given on a training type airplane, known as the "PT," and consists of dual instruction, the fundamental flying maneuvers, accuracy work and acrobatics.

In the Basic Stage.

On the Basic Stage, the student advances to a larger, more powerful and speedier type of airplane known as the "BT" type. In this place, with expert instructors, he now reviews all of the work done on the Primary Stage, but in a ship with different flying qualities and which more nearly approach those of tactical squadrons. At this stage, he also gets formation flying, strange field landings, instrument flying under the hood, and day and night navigation flights.

The third quarter of the student's scholastic year is spent at the Advanced Flying School where he specializes in either Pursuit, Bombardment, Attack or Observation aviation, using service type equipment. In addition to intensive experience in day and night navigation, instrument flying, and transition to all types of military airplanes available at the Advanced Flying School.

A student can absorb only a limited amount of flying instruction each day, especially during the first few months of the course. Therefore, from the very beginning of the course, ground instruction goes hand in hand with flying instruction. The main subjects taught are airplane engines, theory of flight, radio code, ground gunnery, air navigation, meteorology, airplane maintenance, military law, maps, discipline and a few other subjects.

The student body is made up of Flying Cadets and student officers. Each new class consists of approximately 150 men. The class beginning in October of each year usually is composed of from 50 to 80 second lieutenants from the graduating class at West Point.

From Civil Life.

The Flying Cadets, with the exception of a few enlisted men from the Army, are drawn entirely from civil life. They are selected from candidates between the ages of 21 and 27 years who have successfully completed at least two years in a college or university and who are in excellent physical condition. College graduates, however, received priority in the selection of students.

Upon graduation from the Training Center the Flying Cadet is assigned to a tactical squadron at one of the Air Corps stations in the United States for an additional year, upon completion of which he is commissioned a second lieutenant in the Air Corps Reserve and serves an additional year with a tactical unit as a second lieutenant.

The young officer graduate from the training center is also assigned immediately to a tactical unit in the Air Corps. Upon the completion of his active duty as a second lieutenant the young reserve officer returns to civil life, retaining his status as an Air Corps Reserve officer. He is eligible to take examinations for a commission in the regular Army when and if vacancies exist, and can affiliate himself with local Reserve or National Guard units, thus maitaining his flying experience and his military contacts and associations.

In the period of one year at the training center the young student receives a total of 323 hours' flying instruction. As a result of this intensive instruction carried on almost continualy throughout the year at the training center, the students and regular personnel put in a tremendous number of flying hours per year. For the fiscal year 1935 this flying for the training center, computed in airplane flying time, amounted to 113,802 airplane hours. The flying time for the remainder of the regular Army for the same period was 312,575 hours, that of the National Guard 40,603 hours and that of the organized reserves, 23,204 hours.

45 Per Cent Finish.

About 45 per cent of the students entering the primary flying school successfully complete the course and graduate from the training center. Most of the failures are due to unsatisfactory progress in flying. Therefore, the fact that a candidate has passed the rigid physical and the educational requirements does not insure his graduation.

The training center appreciates the fact that many of those who are eliminated in its course of flying instruction could be taught to fly under certain conditions, but based on experience of the past, feel that they do not possess those qualities necessary in developing a military fighting team in the air. With a limited number of military pilots authorized for the Air Corps, it is essential to retain only those students who have sufficient aptitude to progress fairly rapidly and safely to a high standard of performance in military flying and combat teamwork that are so necessary in the face of an enemy in active operations.

Information pertaining to the training, the general requirements and the procedure to be followed in submitting application may be obtained readily. Applicants should address the adjutant general of the Army or the chief of the Air Corps, Washington, D. C.

The trend of military airplane development definitely points to the use of multi-engined airplanes of greater size, greater speed and greater cruising range. The operation and maintenance of the modern military airplane with its radio equipment, blind landing equipment, supercharged engines, controllable pitch propellers, together with other instruments and equipment, clearly indicate more air space, more ground space, more hangar space, more shop space, and the extension of all ground and air courses now being given at Randolph and Kelly Fields as soon as modern equipment becomes available.

Task Is Formidable.

With the War Department's approval of the 2,320-airplane program as recommended by the War Department special committee, headed by Newton D. Baker; with the former chief of staff, Gen. MacArthur, recommending that this figure be stepped up to 2,500 airplanes; with a present strength of approximately only 1,300 airplanes for the entire Air Corps; with an actual shortage in flying personnel to face, which may be critical if not foreseen and synchronized with an improvement in the airplane situation; with England, France, Japan, Italy and Germany entering upon greatly expanding programs for their air forces in recognition of increasing importance of aviation in national defense; with our geographical isolation fast becoming a thing of the past; with the fairly safe and reasonable assumption that our military aviation will continue to expand in years to come, the Air Corps Training Center undoubtedly has before it a formidable task in maintaining the youth of the combat squadrons of our regular Army and National Guard, and a pool of Reserves for immediate service in a national emergency.

Naval Reserves Will Hear Talks From Crouter

Series of Lectures Arranged by Lieutenant Commander for First Battalion.

Headquarters of the First Battalion, United States Naval Reserve, at the Washington Navy Yard, announced last week that Lieut. Comdr. Mark H. Crouter, U. S. N., officer in charge of naval reserve affairs in this district and aid to the commandant of the Washington Navy Yard, has prepared a new series of lectures for the officers of the battalion.

Commander Crouter proposes to include among subjects the various duties of officers at emergency drills and shipboard evolutions. Particular attention will be given to instruction in the mooring board and the duties of officers at battle problems which is at the present a major activity of training for the Fleet Divisions of the Battalion. With the coming inspection in the spring, local officers consider these talks as being particularly timely. The talks will be held at the Navy Yard each week on Thursday night.

The following changes in enlisted personnel have been announced by the officer of the battalion commander, Lieut. James E. Sullivan:

F. R. Barrett, boatswain's mate, first class, of the Third Fleet Division, has been promoted to the rating of chief boatswain's mate.

Hugh Curries, of the Third Division, has been advanced from apprentice seaman to seaman second class.

Richard K. Branson, of the Second Division, advanced from apprentice seaman to seaman second class.

Tour Over Czechoslovakian Republic Unfolds Striking Panorama of Civilization

Prague Fine Example of Builders' Art

Crafts of Ages Live Anew in Flower-Decked Capital City.

Health Resorts Dot the Countryside; Spas Are Famous.

Some of the prettiest country of the world is embraced by the Czechoslovakian Republic. The land stretches some 600 miles from west to east, and the traveler who enjoys a journey through it will pass in succession the stages of its development, leading backward from the advanced stage of modern industry in the west eastward to elemental and primeval scenes of another day.

In the Bata Shoe Works in Zlin, 75,000 pairs of shoes are a day's output. In the Carpatho-Ruthenian region in the eastern section of the country the people weave their own brightly colored clothing and carve their own wooden vessels by hand.

Struggle Depicted.

Centuries of struggling for existence have brought forth from the Czechoslovaks imperishable art in the form of poetry, music and folk songs, from the simple peasant creations to the more complex, maturer compositions of masters. You will see it in the beautiful old national costumes still worn in Slovakia; in the highly artistic ornamentation of their little cottages, and in the architecture of the wooden churches.

The capital of Czechoslovakia is Prague. Here are Gothic structures, buildings of the Renaissance and Empire styles, and especially predominant, the flowery, charming loveliness of the Baroque architecture. Strahov's picture gallery houses are masterpieces of art, by Van Dyck, Rubens, Holbein and Reni; and behind the portals of its world-famous library are thousands of precious volumes and rare manuscripts.

But the streets of Prague, lined as they are with the splendor and the art of the ages, teem with life and traffic. And throughout the entire land, in cities, towns and villages, modern and completely ancient, is a prevailing atmosphere of industry and respect for their land.

Nation of Many Spas.

Czechoslovakia is full of spas, health resorts and watering places which attract vacationists and health-seekers from all parts of Europe as well as the United States.

The renowned Carlsbad is here, and Jachymov, where radium was first discovered, and where the waters are said to be the strongest radio-active in the world.

The famous mountain region of Czechoslovakia is the gigantic range of the Tatras, where in the winter ski contests attract huge crowds of sportsminded society; and in the summer, the freshness of the mountain air lures from city confines tourists from all parts of Europe.

The National Hotel of Cuba, newly prepared for the season. Cuba is enjoying a gayer season than for several years and many sports and social events are planned for the entertainment of Cuba's visitors. The Cuban Industrial and Agricultural Exhibition at Rancho Boyeros, just outside Havana, is attracting wide interest.

Hanc Delivering Czechoslovakia Talk Tuesday

Consul at New York Second Speaker of The Post's Series for 1936.

Using motion pictures and colored slides to illustrate his lecture on Czechoslovakia, Josef Hanc will deliver the second of the 1936 series of The Washington Post Illustrated Travel Lectures at the Masonic Auditorium, Thirteenth and New York avenue, at 8:15 p. m., Tuesday. This will be the first time that Czechoslovakia, one of the most interesting of all European countries, has been the subject of a Post travel talk.

Mr. Hanc, who is the Czechoslovakian consul at New York, tells many interesting stories of his native land, its history, traditions, and scenic beauty. This country in southeastern Europe is now one of the most important on the continent and its hospitality, its celebrated food and natural charm are attracting thousands of visitors each year. Czechoslovakia is also an important manufacturing country and is taking a growing interest and position in European military and political affairs.

Tickets for this lecture and future Post Travel Lectures may be purchased from The Washington Post, E street near Fourteenth, or at the auditorium box office after 7 p. m. on the evenings of the lectures. For complete information on this lecture and the schedule of lectures to be given during the remainder of the season, address the Travel and Resort Department of The Post.

Seaboard Arranges For Heavier Traffic

Five Air-Conditioned Trains Go South Daily.

Keeping pace with the increase in travel to the South which marks this season, the Seaboard Airline Railway has arranged for five completely air-conditioned trains to leave daily, on fast schedules, for Florida and the South.

The Orange Blossom Special, leader of this fleet of winter trains, leaves Washington at 5:10 p. m. daily with the latest type of Pullman equipment, club, lounge and dining cars.

Seaboard has also announced special fares to Carolina, Georgia and Florida resorts. A special feature of the Florida route is the inclusion of both coasts. The fleet also includes the Southern States Special, the Cotton States Special, the New York-Florida Limited and the Robert E. Lee. These are the only completely air-conditioned trains to Florida and the South, says Edward Plack, Seaboard's assistant general passenger agent here.

The other committee members appointed were John Huss, representing the Lakewood Civic League, and Lippman Gerber, representing the American Legion. Great Salt Lake Is Drying Up, Pilots of Air Liners Believe

Is Reported as Shrinking and Now at Its Lowest Level in History; Scientists Are Divided on Question of Sea.

Is Great Salt Lake, one of the modern wonders of the world, drying up? Scientists are divided on that question, but pilots of United Air Lines, skirting the mile-high inland sea of Utah on its coast-to-coast airway, report that the lake is shrinking and is now at the lowest level in its history.

It is estimated that the lake area visible to plane passengers contains 6,000,000,000 tons of salt. Its salt density is approximately four times that of the ocean.

Because of the interest passengers as well as geologists manifest in the phenomena now appearing in Great Salt Lake, United Air Lines has issued the following bulletin:

Great Salt Lake originally covered 19,000 square miles, and although its surface area today is only 2,000 square miles, it is the largest inland salt sea in the world. It has a surface area of approximately six times that of the Dead Sea in Palestine.

Airplane passengers have noted the recession of the salt water by location of the pavillions and bath houses which once were in the salt water and are now several hundred yards away from the water. Also, several large islands which jutted up from the water surface, are now connected with the dry land. Air travelers look down on tufa mounds covered with sodium chloride as saturation has reached and passed with salt settling in a thick, glassy cake over the bottom of the lake. The water is so salty that a person can now float in the water although weighted with 20 pounds or more.

It was in 1850 that Great Salt Lake was first surveyed by an Army engineer. It was then at one of its low levels, but later raised 10 feet. In 1870 it reached an all-time high, but since then there have been fluctuating declines.

Flying west from Great Salt Lake, United's course is over the desert, a vast glittering plain of white, one of the Nation's outstanding geographical features. The desert is nearly all white salt and was once a lake bed; it is now a natural landing field. It was here that Sir Malcolm Campbell found the ideal race course, smooth as a floor, where he recently established an automobile speed record of 304 miles an hour.

United stewardesses report passengers regard Great Salt Lake and the Boulder Dam project as two highlights of a flight over the scenic West.

Cunard Again Leader In Passengers Carried

For the fourteenth consecutive year Cunard White Star and associated lines led in the number of passengers carried to and from Europe, according to a statement given out at the company's offices here, the total for 1935 being 158,091, or nearly 30,000 ahead of its nearest competitor.

Poland's Batory Makes Maiden Voyage in May

Motorliner, Named for King, Scheduled to Commence Service at Gdynia.

The new motorliner Batory, sister ship of the M. S. Pilsudski, and second new transatlantic liner to be built by Poland since the nation regained its independence, will leave Gdynia on her maiden trip on May 18, it was announced by the Gdynia American Line. Launched last July, the new liner is nearing completion at the Monfalcone shipyards in Trieste, Italy.

A distinctive feature of the new liner lies in the innovation of "tourish class" as the top class on board. The Batory, as did the Pilsudski, will cut down the running time between New York and Copenhagen to eight days and to Gdynia to eight and a half days. It will have modern equipment, including tile swimming pool, gymnasium, intercabin telephones, elevators, cinema theaters, children's playrooms and garage.

The Batory was named after Stephen Batory, King of Poland, who reigned from 1576 to 1586. The real founder of Poland's maritime ambitions, Batory based his policies on the idea that Poland must have a seacoast to become a world power.

Atlantic City Will Be a Suburb For Convention of Democrats

Atlantic City, January 18.—Atlantic City will virtually become a suburb of Philadelphia during the Democratic Convention.

One of the major inducements put forth by the City of Philadelphia in its successful efforts to secure the National Democratic Convention was its nearness to Atlantic City and with the full co-operation of the seashore resort and the City of Brotherly Love, the Democratic Convention will afford delegates opportunities for both work and play such as no other meeting place has been able to offer.

For many of the delegates the convention will take on a holiday air since they plan to bring their families to Atlantic City during the convention and will themselves combine convention business in Philadelphia with rest and recreation in Atlantic City, with its beach and famous boardwalk.

A veritable battle of champions will be staged during the seventh annual Atlantic Coast Squash Racquets championship for men to be played in Haddon Hall on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Donald Strachen, of Philadelphia, will defend his national championship title against such outstanding stars as Neil Sullivan, also of Philadelphia; Beekman Poole, of New York, and William H. Baugher, of Baltimore.

A new trophy, emblematic of the Atlantic Coast championship is being presented this year by the Chalfonte-Haddon Hall Hotels, sponsors of the annual event.

Artist, 14, Paints Mural For Classroom

Aviatrix Solos With But Six Hours' Instruction

Sees Future of Flying In Young Pilots' Hands

Lorraine Is Piling Up Flying Hours for Private Pilot's License; Hopes to Hold Trasport and and Mechanic's Licenses, Too.

Six hours' instruction was all a 16-year-old Kansas girl needed to fly a plane solo.

There's a reason for her remarkable progress. "I have been interested in aviation ever since I can remember," writes Lorraine Dickerhoff, of 805 South Sante Fe, Chanute. "My father was the first one to fly an airplane off what is now Martin Johnson field here."

Lorraine has some interesting memories of those pioneer days.

"I can remember when I used to accompany my father to the field and watch him fly those old biplanes," she says.

Father Ties Plane To Fence at Night.

"As there were no hangars, he tied the plane to a fence and covered it with canvas at night."

Lorraine's father started teaching her to fly last summer and now she is piling up solo time to get her private pilot's license.

After that, she wants to earn a transport pilot's certificate.

"I should also like to have a mechanic's license," she asserts. "I think every pilot should know enough about his machine to keep it in safe flying condition.

Would Like Aviation As a Future Career.

"If I ever take up aviation as a career, I shall want a position as a saleswoman or demonstrator for a large corporation.

"I would also be interested in giving flying instructions so others could carry on aviation.

"Aviation is the coming thing and I believe whole-heartedly in the future of flying.

"As I am one of the youngest pilots, I feel it is really up to the younger generation to make aviation the thing it should be. I will do my part in promoting it."

Lorraine Dickerhoff.

History of America Is Shown on Three Panels

George Spends Year and Half on Work as Farewell Gift to School; Picture Is Inspired by Lecture, Unveiled at Ceremony.

Sketching and working for a year and a half in oils and water colors, a 14-year-old New York artist left a large mural painting depicting the highlights of American history as a farewell gift to his grammar school.

The work was unveiled recently at Public School 45, South Ozone Park, New York, before a distinguished audience of civic and educational leaders. The ceremony climaxed the school's Open School Week program.

Starts Work While In Eighth Grade.

The artist was George Meyerriecks, of 119-30 146th street, South Ozone Park, who was inspired to undertake the work by a classroom lecture on mural painting. It was started when George was an eighth grade student but not completed until after his graduation.

"Most of the time spent on the mural," he writes, "was in making sketches and water color paintings, and in checking museums and libraries for information on costumes.

"The painting is 4 by 12 feet, and decorates a classroom wall. The panel at the left is of Columbus' three ships crossing the ocean.

"The lower half of the center panel depicts the buildings of today and a harbor scene, while above are the enormous buildings and other inventions of the future.

"The right panel shows a scene at Valley Forge as the American flag is being raised. This is the birth of a nation."

George is pursuing his art work at John Adams High School and plans to become an art instructor.

"Before beginning the mural," George adds, "I had only undertaken two other oil works, both of which were small ones."

Ship Modeler Turns to Airplanes, Picking Aviation as Future Career

Although only 15, Donald Dodd, 6162 Lalite avenue, St. Louis, Mo., has already decided on a career as an airplane designer.

Two years ago, he built a model boat, won a prize and turned to airplanes. "Then I joined a department store's model plane club and found there was something more about a plane than just building it. You had to make it fly. I have won four cups, quite a few medals, ribbons and cash prizes with my 75 models."

Donald has two scale models of which he is particularly proud. They are of a Martin bomber, and the Sikorsky clipper ship that blazed the Pacific airway trail. The Sikorsky is complete in every detail, even down to electric lights and proper kind of wood on floors and stairs.

Donald's immediate plans call for entrance to the U. S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md.

Midget Motorcycle Costing But $14.35 Speeds at 40 M.P.H

With a second-hand motorcycle engine for which he paid $3, a discarded bicycle frame, a pair of "Doenut" wheels with balloon tires and some odds and ends, Hi Sibley, jr., of 1954 Brigden Blvd., Pasadena, Calif., has built himself a watch-charm motorcycle that will do 40 miles an hour.

Hi, who has already crashed Parade with stories of his various construction jobs, says: "Anybody else could make one of these little jobs, but he should first get his engine and build the frame to fit it. The total cost was only $14.35."

Abe Babshan Takes Charge After Holdup

Routs Robber, Notifies Mother, Calls Police and Ambulance.

Largely because 8-year-old Abe Babshan knows just what to do in an emergency, his father is recovering from the effects of a vicious attack by a hold-up man armed with an iron pipe.

Abe was in the apartment over his father's store at 818 Rhode Island avenue, Washington, D. C., when the hold-up occurred. Hearing a noise, he rushed downstairs, saw his father bleeding and unconscious on the floor. The thief was rifling the cash registers.

Abe Babshan.

"I picked up a butcher knife and hurled it at the man," writes Abe, "but it missed him and he escaped with the money."

Telephones for Help.

Then Abe set to work. Calmly, he called his sister to do what she could for the wounded father, then got busy on the telephone.

"I phoned the hospital for an ambulance," he continues, "and called the police."

Then he phoned his mother, who was visiting at his grandmother's home, and with presence of mind and tact that would be envied by any older person, told her, as he says, "there has been a slight accident and there is no need to get excited."

Life Is a Song for Tony Now; But Once—

Now that football season is over at Lincoln High, Cleveland, Ohio, Tony Nigro, of 3418 West Fiftieth street, has time on his hands.

Without football he now has about ten whole hours with not a thing to do but sleep, eat, and get from one of his many activities to the other.

Tony Nigro.

Here's Tony's account of his everyday round during the football season: "I left the house for school at 7:30. Arriving about 8, I was in class until 2, then went out for football practice which sometimes lasted until 6 o'clock. Went home and ate supper, then left for work (as a fruit packer) and worked until 12 and sometimes 1 o'clock. Went to bed about 2:30 and got up about 7:15. Then I started the day's drudge all over again."

With exception of football Tony still maintains the rest of the schedule.

Shirley Temple's Fans Can Enjoy Her All Day

Dyed-in-the-wool Shirley Temple fans can now have reminders of her at play, meals and sleep, and even while they bathe. Nine manufacturers are busy turning out scores of articles fashioned in her likeness.

Waking in the morning, the fan may use soap molded in the likeness of the actress. Donning her Shirley Temple bathrobe, the girl may then repair to her dressing room to dress in a Shirley Temple frock over silken Shirley Temple underwear and with Shirley Temple shoes and stockings.

At the breakfast table she may find a Shirley Temple plate.

If the day is warm, she may don a Shirley Temple bathing suit and go swimming. If cold, she may keep warm with a Shirley Temple scarf and Shirley Temple mittens. Or, if she is going to a party, Shirley Temple gloves may replace the mittens and a hair ribbon and fancy handkerchief complete the ensemble along with a Shirley Temple hat or beret.

Should she spend the day indoors, there are numerous Shirley Temple dolls, crayon color books and even note paper bearing the name of the star.

For formal meals, numerous Shirley Temple glass pieces and dishes stand ready. The fan may don warm Shirley Temple pajamas at the end of a perfect Shirley Temple day.

Church-Going Cat Has Regular Pew in Chapel

Ginger, a cat belonging to a Mrs. Gould, of Hatton Garden, England, is a regular church attender. Daily, Ginger slips out of the house to occupy his regular pew at early mass in a nearby chapel. Service over, he awaits for the assistant rector and they go to breakfast together. Ginger enjoys a saucer of milk with a dash of tea.

Officer's Wife Writes From Distant Isles

Jack Devises Unique Method to Secure Information.

Jack A. Lee is only 12 but he's an explorer.

From his home, 824 West Fifty-sixth street, Seattle, Wash., he explores the world by mail. He sends pictures and a description of his native State to correspondents in foreign lands and they send him pictures and a description of their homes.

"I am a stamp collector," writes Jack, "and I wanted to write to some foreign places and get stamps and information. I addressed my letters to police commissioners as I thought they would be the most important people in their countries."

Father's Friends Write.

Jack received several letters from friends of his father who live in other countries, but by far his most interesting account came from a contact made himself.

Mrs. E. Hooley, wife of the police commissioner of Port Stanley, Falkland Islands, sent pictures and a full description of the tiny, gale-buffeted islands in the Atlantic Ocean off the Argentina coast.

"There are neither trains nor trees here," Mrs. Hooley wrote, "but lately we have had electric lights and water in most of the homes, and have also had a few roads made.

"We have about 14 motor cars, 11 motor lorries (large motor trucks), 16 motor bikes and about 40 wireless sets. We do all our traveling by horseback or boat.

Torn by Many Gales.

"These islands have been owned by the French, then by the Spanish and, 100 years ago were taken over by the English. This is the only place in South America where the British flag flies and where you hear English spoken by the whole population.

"It is ofttimes buffeted and swept by murderous gales and seas from the Antarctic, that scream and tear their way round the dreaded Horn.

Style Queen Dresses for Only $18.63

Gets Trip to National 4-H Club Congress as Prize.

Dressed in the height of fashion on $18.63, Eleanor Acker, 16, of Junction City, Kans., won the title of Kansas Style Queen at the 1935 4-H Club meet at Hutchinson, Kans., and a free trip to the National 4-H Club Congress in Chicago.

"The $18.63 covered everything I wore," writes Eleanor. "The dress was a combination of two patterns. It took me about a week to make it. Simply cut and made of a lovely shade of brown crepe, its only trimming is a gold clip with a gold buckle and buttons."

Eleanor has been in club work for five years and has been sewing for four. This is her first State championship.

Wins Spray of Ivy As Nation's Best Horace Translator

Philip R. Reiner, 17, of 1614 Iowa street, Dubuque, Iowa, was awarded first prize in a Nation-wide contest for high school students in translating the poetry of Horace.

The contest was to commemorate the 2,000th year since the birth of the celebrated Roman poet. Philip, like other Iowa students, translated the sixteenth ode from Book II of Homer's works.

Philip Reiner.

"The prize is a metalized spray of ivy leaves from Horace's famous Sabine Farm, which I am to present to my school on behalf of the Italian government," Philip explains. "My personal prize will be chosen from a list of authoritative works on Horace which I have not yet received."

Philip does not consider himself a poet, although he admits that he won third prize in a poetry contest held by his school during his sophomore year. He is now a senior in Columbia Academy, at Dubuque.

Canning Ace Can Now Go to College

Outstanding canning ability, developed in providing her family with well-balanced meals during winter months, has afforded 17-year-old Isabel Travis, of Sun River, Mont., the chance to attend college.

A canning record of 2,000 pints of fruits, vegetables, pickles and meats won for Isabel the title of national 4-H Club canning champion. The honor carried with it a college scholarship.

Serves Good Meals to Large Family.

But the above-named amount is only part of the tremendous quantity of foodstuffs she has put up in recent years. "During the past four years," she writes, "I have canned 3,710 quarts, brined 152 gallons, dried 46 pounds, and stored 7,470 pounds of fruits, vegetables and meats."

"It really was an all-year project at our home. I don't know how our family of six could possibly have afforded to serve well-balanced, appetizing meals unless we had raised and preserved our meals and vegetables.

"I have entered 142 exhibits at 15 different fairs," she adds, "and won 53 placings amounting to $70 in prizes."

Edward Fells Crazy Man to Protect Home

Well-Aimed Blow Sends Maniac to Prison for Intruding.

Edward Doerr, jr., 14, of 203 Edgar street, Evansville, Ind., showed nerve that he himself never suspected he possessed, when he defended his parents and his home from a maniac the other night.

Edward was awakened by the man trying to force a window. The intruder then crashed the front door glass and ran across the boy's room toward the parents' bedroom. But before he could enter, Edward flung a stool at his head and stunned him. Then following up his advantage, he beat the man with the stool until his father and the neighbors arrived to help.

Edward Doerr.

"I really don't know how I managed to gather up the nerve to attack the man," Edward writes, "but I just had to do something and do it quickly."

The intruder had been crazed by excessive use of alcoholic liquor. Tried a few days later he was sentenced to from 1 to 10 years in prison for unlawfully entering a house.

Edward has three young sisters who were badly frightened by the rumpus, and his mother was almost a nervous wreck from the shock.

Farm Boy Watches King Snake Devour A Large Moccasin

A king snake can swallow another snake larger than itself!

Joe McCullers, 17, who lives near Garner, N. C., learned that at first hand when he happened upon a fierce snake battle. Here's Joe's story:

Joe McCullers.

"One morning I was walking near a creek in our pasture when my attention was attracted to a great splashing in the water. Going closer, I saw a king snake about 3½ feet long starting to swallow a wriggling water snake head first! The water snake was about the same length but much larger around.

"I sat down to watch, and after about five minutes the water snake died for lack of air. When the king snake had swallowed about a foot of its prey, I scooped both upon a wide board and carried them home.

"With my family, I watched until the king snake finished his meal about an hour later. He was too full to crawl, so I carried him back to the creek and put him down under a tree.

"He hadn't moved at noon, and was still there at sunset, but the next morning he was gone. Evidently by that time he had digested enough of the water snake to crawl away under his own power."

Engines of Many Lands and Ages

Exchanges 'Shots' for Foreign Photographs

Washingtonian Prefers Steam to Electric Engines; Has Visited 47 States Searching for New Train Subjects for His Camera.

From Maine to California, William Witbeck, 18, 1803 Biltmore street northwest, Washington, D. C., has traveled in search of locomotive pictures.

Inheriting a love of trains from his father, who was an engineer, William has made two long trips, touching every State except Washington and snapping pictures as he went.

As member of an international locomotive photographers' club, he has collected "shots" of foreign locomotives, some of which are pictured on the left.

"I have over 12,000 photos, two correspondents in England, one in Japan and one in New Zealand," he says. "I take the letters from the Japanese photographer to the Library of Congress, where they are translated for me."

Goes South on $1.20.

He began his hobby four years ago. "I just seemed to have a liking for trains," he explains. "I like to go anywhere in them. My first trip was to the South. I went on my own, hitch-hiking most of the way.

"I went from Washington, D. C., to Mississippi on $1.20. I just wanted to see what I could make it on."

On that trip, William covered the Southern States and the Middle West, taking many pictures of trains of the many numerous lines in these sections.

He sandwiched trips up and down the East Coast in between the Southern jaunt and his next long hop, which was across the continent. He missed Washington State on this trip because it was too cold.

Has Piloted Trains.

Railroading is in William's blood. He's a railroad man of the old school, has traveled 63,000 miles on freight trains, and prefers steam engines to the swish of the new electric monsters. "Steam engines get you dirty," he admits, "but I don't mind. I like to hear the exhaust and to feel the tugging."

He has piloted locomotives many times and would like to be an engineer, but is afraid an eye injury caused by a stray "BB" shot will prevent it.

"A freight engine," he declares, "has small drive wheels, while a passenger engine has large ones. This is because a smaller wheel turns faster and gives more power.

"Locomotives are classified according to the number of their wheels. 'Two-eight-two' means there are two wheels, one on each side, under the front of the engine; eight wheels, four on each side, in the center truck, and two wheels under the cab.

Likes Abandoned Engines.

"I like pictures of abandoned locomotives. I have one of an old engine that was run into a shed on a siding during the World War. They needed cars, so they took this engine's cars and left it to rot. It is still there.

"Some locomotives used in Western mountains, where there are sharp curves, have the cab in front. This is so engineers can see better around bends."

Art Class Paints Mural To Adorn Library Wall

McKinley Junior High School pupils, of Flint, Mich., have adorned their library wall with a large mural depicting various school activities. The project, completed after months of work, was directed by Miss Marion Meyer, art instructor. Many of the figures in the mural were sketched from student models in the art class during a study of figure drawing. The sketches were enlarged and arranged in a mural 10 feet long and 4 feet high.

'Waterfront Lady'

Ann Rutherford.

Ann Attains Film Stardom In One Bound

Training at Home and on Stage and Radio Proves Aid.

Full movie stardom in one bound is the record of Ann Rutherford, 18, of Toronto, Canada, and San Francisco, Calif.

Ann had been trained from infancy by her actor parents and already had a sister, Judith Arlen, in the movies.

More important, she had been acclaimed by stage and radio fans for her work.

Starred in "Waterfront Lady," she fully justified their hopes by winning the favor of movie critics and fans the country over, and is now under long-term contract with Republic Pictures.

Her earliest ambition was to write poetry. She had quite a bit of it published in magazines. She likes to ride horseback, swim, play tennis, and shoot, but her principal hobby is raising canaries. She has 19.

Skating Safety

A London, Eng., ice skating club has adopted a safety-first measure that might well be employed on the frozen ponds of this country.

There, wobbly-legged beginners, who never know when they're going to "have a seat" sport a large "L" upon their backs. It stands for Learner—whether the learner stands or not!

The club has found that the designation minimizes "traffic" mix-ups, and saves other skaters painful cuts from the steel-shod flying feet of the falling beginners.

Chinese Ways.

1 Why don't the 400,000,000 Chinese arise and expel the Japanese invaders now penetrating their boundaries? The reason is that China is divided against itself and has been so for centuries. A Chinaman's allegiance is to his particular war-lord, and not to his country as a whole.

But Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, chief of the National government's forces, is out to change this attitude. First, he had to impress the soldier with the idea that he was a protector of the people and not a robber sent out to prey upon villagers and farmers under the shield of a uniform. Next, he had to convince the citizens that the soldiers were good fellows.

To accomplish these, Chiang's soldiers have abolished banditry in the areas where they are stationed. They have rebuilt roads, city walls and houses, distributed seed and even helped farmers plant them.

Goat War.

2 A "goat war" put the Virgin Islands in the news lately. It seems that the numerous goats there had been raiding a sugar cane plantation of the Virgin Islands Company. The Company, in self-defense, stationed guards, armed with shotguns, at "strategic" points on the plantation to fire on the goats as they came to eat the young sugar cane. The "war" is now in full swing.

This is by no means the first disturbance the Virgin Islands have known, however. Discovered in 1494 by Columbus, they became pirate strongholds in the seventeenth century and remained so until Great Britain cleared them out in 1801. Denmark claimed the islands until 1917, when the United States bought them for $25,000,000.

Altogether, there are about fifty of the Virgin Islands. They are situated some 60 miles east of Puerto Rico, have a total area of 149 square miles, of which 132 are contained in the islands of St. Thomas, St. John and St. Croix. St. Croix, with 80 square miles, is the largest and has the most productive soil.

St. Thomas is rocky and barren, but has one of the finest harbors in the West Indies, utilized as a United States naval base.

Principal products of the islands include bay rum, cotton and tobacco. Total population in 1930 was 22,012 of which nearly 95 per cent were Negroes. Full American citizenship was granted the islanders by act of Congress in 1927.

Indian Migration.

3 A few scientists hold that the Indians first came to America from the Pacific Islands and Australia. But after examining 10,000 Indian skulls, Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, noted student of race origins of the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C., announces he finds no proof of the theory.

Aside from skull differences, he says, there is other evidence to show the theory is wrong. The Pacific islands were not settled until a few thousand years before Christ, and by that time the New World had been populated for centuries.

Even more absurd is the idea of Australian colonization, he says. There is reason to doubt that Australia itself was even populated at the time of the earliest Indian colonization of America.

Some anthropologists have suggested that Indians came by way of Antarctica when that island continent was much warmer than it is today. But the last time Antarctica was warm, say the geologists, was millions of years before human beings peopled the earth.

All of which, incidentally, strengthens the belief that the first Indians migrated here from Asia across Bering Strait.

Glass Houses.

4 Houses, factories, skyscrapers and even whole cities may soon be built of glass. Two New York inventors have devised a practical way of constructing anything from a hencoop to a second Empire State Building of glass bricks.

First they built a glass filling station to advertise their product. Illuminated at night in a New York square, it stood out like a block of light, attracted business and saved money because it needed no paint. Now, finally convinced of its practicability, the Port Authority of New York has just announced that a new subway tunnel will be lined with glass instead of concrete.

Glass has several advantages over other building materials, it is said. First, it admits healthful sunlight. Glazes and enamels chip and wear, but glass is glass all the way through, the inventors declare. If it gets grimy, soap and water will restore its luster. And the cost is no greater than that of tile.

Seven buildings of glass are now being constructed in New York City alone and others are reported either completed or in process of construction throughout the country. One glass skyscraper in New York will have an 80-foot tower of glass the most ambitious glass structure yet designed.

Air Dreamer.

5 When Igor Sikorsky was 11 he played with a toy helicopter in his home at Kiev, Russia, and dreamed of flying in a machine of his own invention. Today an internationally famous builder of giant amphibians and flying-boats, Igor Sikorsky still looks to the future.

He visions huge multi-motored air-liners equipped with real dining-rooms, sleeping rooms and lounges, and carrying 25 to 40 people safely over the oceans in a single hop!

A true pioneer of aviation, Sikorsky, at 46, looks back upon 24 years of successful plane building. In 1911, after much experimentation and many crashes, he realized his boyhood ambition and built a real flying machine.

In 1913, when he was 24, he flew the first successful multi-motored airplane.

During the World War years, some 70 huge "Sikorskys" flew over shell-torn Europe raining destruction from the skies. They made a total of 400 flights over the German lines. Only one was brought down by an attacking plane.

When the Russian revolution put the Reds in power, the young airplane designer moved to France. And when the war was over, he transferred his home and work to the United States.

Since few in this country knew of his achievements, he had to begin all over again. Organizing a small company on Long Island, he managed to raise funds by soliciting small subscriptions and started building his giant ships for commercial use.

By 1929, he had put many multi-motored planes, amphibians and flying boats in service all over the world, and his company had been expanded and moved to a modern factory in Stratford, Conn.

Water Under Florida.

6 Florida has long been agitated as to whether or not the sea-level ship canal now being constructed across the State would flood nearby wells with salt water.

The question was finally settled the other day by a special board of geologists and engineers appointed by the War Department. The board reported that a great underground reservoir of fresh water lies in the porous rocks underneath the Florida Peninsula and even extends far out under the sea in places.

Water in this underground reservoir is being continually pushed to the surface by the pressure of the earth. For this reason the War Department believes that "salt water entering the canal cannot contaminate the underground water, because the flow of water will be into the canal, and not from it."

Stutter 'Cure.'

7 People who stutter were given hope of a cure not long ago when it was reported 24 stutterers regained almost normal speech while crawling on all-fours.

This experiment, conducted at the University of Michigan, led Miss Hazel Geniesse, of Ann Arbor, Mich., to believe speaking difficulties arose from high blood pressure in certain parts of the brain near the speech nerve centers.

Not so, answered Dr. Smiley Blanton, of Cornell Medical College, past president of the American Speech Correction Association. Dr. Blanton insists the stutterers had less difficulty talking while crawling because of the mere power of suggestion.

In other words, he thinks the stutterers believed they would speak normally in that position and the power of suggestion led them to do so.

He said the same results had been obtained when stutterers placed their fingers behind their ears. But the cure was only temporary.

Dr. Blanton added that his studies indicated that the cause of stuttering was a nervous state.

National News

8 A year ago, high-ranking Army officers were grappling with a problem. They realized the United States air forces were not sufficiently mobile and were striving to correct this.

Finally they hit upon an idea brand new in the annals of major air forces. All except a few of the Air Corps units were put under one commander who was responsible only to the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War.

The new organization was named the General Headquarters Air Force. Though the squadrons comprising it were based at various fields all over the country, at a single order the commander could bring them all to one point.

The system was to be tested for a year. That year is almost up and the plan has been apparently successful.

So the Army Air Corps enters a new era from a colorful past. For over 20 years it was dominated by a man who recently retired—Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, former Chief of the Air Corps.

Gen. Foulois was not only the Army's first but, for more than a year, was its only pilot. In 1908 he taught himself to fly in the Army's sole airplane and kept it repaired with money from his own pocket.

During the World War, the Army Air Corps' wings grew and have

Though the Air Corps is essentially a war machine standing ready to protect the country, it also serves in peace. Its peacetime value is inscribed on the valor awards given its men.

The awards show how pilots flew the mail when commercial airmail contracts were canceled. Though poorly equipped for the job and subjected to unfavorable weather conditions, they nevertheless discharged their duty valiantly in the face of death. The mails went through.

Other citations reveal how one pilot flew a doctor on an errand of mercy through a blinding snowstorm; how others sacrificed their lives landing planes full of passengers safely; how still others worked day and night, sparing neither themselves nor their machines, developing blind flying and blind landing systems now used by large airlines.

Other peacetime performances of Air Corps may be only routine to pilots and entail little danger, but the job they do is invaluable. To do its service to mankind in peace and war the Army Air Corps is always practicing, always striving for perfection. One of its most spectacular recent experiments was bombing of the lava stream from Mauna Loa, the Hawaiian volcano.

New Austria-Hungary?

9 Is a central European power about to arise from the ruins of its former glory? That is what diplomats would like to know after delegates from Austria and Hungary met in Vienna the other day to consider common military, political and economic problems. One official in Vienna was even quoted as saying that far-reaching agreements looking toward restoration of the Austria-Hungarian Empire of pre-war days had been drawn up by the conferees.

The Austria of today is a mere remnant of the Austrian Empire, which was dissolved at the end of the war. In the days of Emperor Francis Joseph of the Hapsburg dynasty Austria-Hungary had 261,259 square miles of territory and 51,000,000 population. It included Austria proper, Hungary, Transylvania, Czechoslovakia, Polish Galicia, the Trentino, Slavonia, Bosnia, Croatia, Herzegovina and the Banat. These territories gave it access to the Adriatic Sea and control of practically all the Danube River.

Now Hungary is an independent kingdom and Austria a republic. All the provinces mentioned are gone, the population is on the wane, Italy threatens from the south, Germany from the north, and overburdening economic problems confront them.

Bigger Muscles.

10 Prof. Walter McNelly, of Miami University, after four years of study, believes that exercise makes muscles bigger, but not better.

"The body," said Prof. McNelly, "is like an engine. Adding more fuel will make it run faster, but will not increase its efficiency. The muscles of the body will not increase their efficiency by use any more than an engine will be made more efficient by constant operation."

Exercise, however, teaches one how to get better results from use of muscular energy, to eliminate useless movements, and to react quicker, he said.

World's Richest.

11 The Nizam of Hyderabad is about to celebrate his silver jubilee, along with his 14,000,000 subjects in the largest native state in India. A descendant of the great Moguls who once ruled magnificently over the Indian Empire, the dark little prince is the world's richest man—a modern Croesus who counts his wealth in figures that would make even a Ford or Rockefeller dizzy.

'Way back in the thirteenth century the Nizam's fierce forefathers led a raiding party into the neighboring territory of the Rajah Ramchandra and brought back jewels of fabulous worth. These formed the nucleus of the tremendously valuable gem collection that represents part of the Nizam's great fortune. Through the years each succeeding Nizam added to the family "pocketbook." Today the jewel collection alone is reputedly worth $2,000,000,000 (the combined personal wealth of Henry and Edsel Ford is estimated at $1,000,000,000) and so immense is the entire fortune that its owner can only guess at the magnitude.

No spendthrift is the 50-year-old ruler. In fact, the tales about his thriftiness are almost as many as his millions. He has 50 marble palaces, yet he usually lives in Spartan simplicity in a small bungalow. His nobles dash about Hyderabad streets in expensive English cars. Sir Mir Osman Ali (the Nazim) rattles around in a low-price American automobile of 1927 vintage. It is even said that he must personally inspect each worn article of clothing before it can be discarded.

Yet he isn't stingy. He gave $100,000,000 to the British war fund during the World War. He plans to spend about $5,000,000 on his jubilee celebration and entertain 20,000 guests. And he has ordered the slaughter of 1,000 oxen and 10,000 sheep to provide a sumptuous feast for the poor of his realm.

Hyderabad's Nizam is a direct descendant of Abu Bakr, father-in-law of Mohammed, prophet and founder of the widespread religion which bears his name. Unlike the majority of his Hindu subjects, the Nizam is a Mohammedan.

Bull Taming.

12 Bulls are often vicious because they don't get much exercise. This is the conclusion of the Bureau of Dairy Industry of the Department of Agriculture. At Beltsville, Md., the bureau hooks a dozen or more bulls at a time to the spokes of a huge horizontal wheel. In the hub of this wheel sits a farmhand who cracks a whip to make them keep going around and around.

All this is part of the work the bureau is doing to find out more about the breeding, feeding and management of cattle. It seems that the more bulls are exercised and the more carefully they are fed, the less vicious they become. Even grumpy old bulls noted for chasing strangers over fences and up trees become tame as kittens after they have been exercised regularly for two or three months, the bureau reports.

It advocates that farmers should adopt this method of bull taming. The wheel could be easily geared to a water pump or a dynamo and real work done as the bulls get their exercise.

Midget State.

13 Liechtenstein, second smallest state in Europe, and the only nation still technically engaged in the World War, sent greeting to the United States for the first time the other afternoon when the Columbia Broadcasting Co. picked up a program from Vaduz, smallest and highest capital in Europe.

Located in the Swiss Alps, Liechtenstein has an area of 65 square miles, almost twice as large as Europe's smallest state, San Marino. Twelve thousand subjects are ruled by 82-year-old Franz von Paula Maria Karl August from a medieval castle at Vaduz.

After a stormy history dating back to the Middle Ages, Liechtenstein secured its independence from Austria in 1918. It has since been under the protection of the neighboring country of Switzerland.

Postage stamps, which are much in demand by collectors, furnish the country's chief revenue. It is still technically at war with Austria because its peace treaty was lost in the shuffle at Versailles and never signed.

Fish Poisoners.

14 The modern world often learns new tricks in the most unexpected places. Who would dream that we had anything to learn from the primitive Chama Indians of Peru? Yet we have.

The Chamas, according to the New York Museum of Natural History, have discovered a poison which smothers whole schools of fish, yet leaves their flesh as good to eat as if they had been caught on hooks.

The poison is made by mashing the root of the barabasco plant. The preparation is then lowered into a stream and in some mysterious way cuts off the supply of oxygen. The fish cannot breathe, die and rise to the surface where the natives gather them up from boats.

The barabasco root is now being studied because it shows promise of supplying the world with an insect poison more deadly than any now used to spray fruits and vegetables.

Northern Route.

15 Ships may soon be plying across the "Roof of the World," through channels cut in the ice by warm currents from the Atlantic Ocean.

Russian explorers have discovered that such a current penetrates the Arctic wastes as far east as Wrangel Island, only 500 miles from Alaska.

About 650 feet wide, the channel is kept free of ice by the warm water current which probably originates in the distant Caribbean Sea and is carried across the Atlantic and north of Europe and Asia by the Gulf Stream.

Land Tides.

16 The world is like a great ball of putty constantly changing its shape in response to the attraction of heavenly bodies, especially the moon, according to Dr. Archer Hoyt, of Pittsburgh, Pa., research physicist for an oil company.

"While perfecting a sensitive gravity apparatus in our laboratory some time ago," he announced, "we discovered the earth is oval shaped. We found that the world actually has a 'bump' that resembles a great belt around the globe. This is caused by the attraction of the moon, sun and other heavenly bodies."

This hump, moving as the earth turns, causes Pittsburgh to rise and fall from 13 to 23 inches daily, Dr. Hoyt found. Heretofore, it was thought that this attraction only caused water "humps," or tides, but it would now appear that tides are also caused in the solid crust of the earth itself.

WINGS OF THE WORLD

Dreams of an airline over the Atlantic conceived in 1919, when an airplane first crossed the ocean, and revived by the thrilling flights of 1927-28, seem about to be fulfilled. Three big problems must be worked out, namely, those dealing with routes, equipment and co-operation.

• • • •

Routes—By far the quickest North Atlantic route is the "Great Circle," followed by Lindbergh. But ice and fog make it almost "unflyable" in winter.

A safer, but more expensive, route is by way of the Azores. The best bet seems to be a combination of the two with summer flying over the "Great Circle" and winter flying via the Azores.

In the South Atlantic, Germany uses boats anchored in mid-ocean as landing bases for her mail-carrying seaplanes.

• • • •

Equipment—Pan-American Airways has its Martin and Sikorsky clippers; England's Imperial Airways has its 24-passenger Short flying boats, and plans a "composite aircraft," while France has its 76-passenger Lieutenant de Vaisseau Paris.

Which of these will be used? Each nation wants to fly its own planes. All foreign companies would like to adopt some features of the Pan-American clippers, generally acknowledged as the finest flying boats afloat.

Germany claims dirigibles are the best for Atlantic crossings. She has her LZ-129 almost ready, and is building a sister ship.

• • • •

Co-operation—An Atlantic airline must be maintained by at least two countries. No nation is going to allow an airline owned entirely by foreigners to use bases on its soil.

To complicate matters, under present laws, only all-American-owned companies can carry United States mail. Pan-American and Imperial Airways have a working agreement, and, between them, all necessary bases except the Azores, while France is trying to fit herself in the picture.

THE GREAT CIRCLE ROUTE IS THE SHORTEST TO ENGLAND, BUT FOG AND ICE MAKE IT PERILOUS. THE AZORES ROUTE IS EXPENSIVE BECAUSE ITS SO LONG. GERMAN AND FRENCH SEAPLANES ALREADY CARRY MAIL AND THE GRAF ZEPPELIN, PASSENGERS, ACROSS THE SOUTH ATLANTIC. THOUGH THIS ROUTE HAS GOOD WEATHER, IT IS TOO FAR FROM THE U.S.

Why, Oh, Why?

Why is the ringhals cobra considered doubly dangerous?

It takes a pretty nasty cobra to be worse than the average deadly cobra, but the ringhals variety, of South Africa, achieves it easily. Possessed of the usual poison fangs for penetrating the skin, this supremely unpleasant creature has the power to spit a jet of venom a distance of a yard or so!

Moreover, it is such a good marksman that it invariably spits directly into the eye of the unfortunate victim, destroying sight.

James Cagney.

Henry Wadsworth, another pilot, also loves her, but Cagney somehow or other bests him. Then Cagney fakes illness to keep a date with her and Stuart Erwin takes his run. While trying to land in a fog, Erwin cracks up and dies.

Cagney feels he is the cause of Erwin's death. In testing a new gadget, Cagney realizes the job is dangerous and fixes things so he pilots the plane instead of Wadsworth, who is scheduled for the run. In a blaze of glory Cagney goes to his death and the girl and boy are left together.

Star—James Cagney was born in New York City, July 17, 1904, and as a youngster had the usual run of jobs as office boy and bundle wrapper until starting his stage career in a chorus.

While appearing with Joan Blondell in "Penny Arcade" in New York, Warner Brothers bought the screen rights to that play. They retained the two young players for their roles in the film and both have since risen to stardom.

Another Fishy Tale.

A strange "fish" was landed recently by fishermen operating on the Baltic Sea near Gdynia, Poland.

It filled their net, had steel sides, and wore rubber "shoes." It had no eyes, wore "glasses" and boasted a horn.

You guessed it—the "fish" was an automobile, believed to have been dropped from a liner in some unexplained fashion.

BOOK OF THE WEEK

"Penny for Luck," by Florence Crannell Means, $2. Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston, Mass. Illustrated.

There is only one word that adequately describes this story, and that is swell!

Impulsive Penny Adams runs away from an orphanage. On the highroad she joins the Smiths, a perplexed family from Denver. Together they move into the Rocky Mountains near Central City to camp in a deserted mining town. It is in this challenging environment that Penny really begins to prove her worth. Luck comes at last, and, with it, mystery, suspense and hairbreadth escape from disaster.

Girls who demand life and action in their stories will revel in this book, and it wouldn't be surprising to hear that Dad and Mother and even Brother like it too.

Author: Mrs. Means lives in Denver, Colo., where she attended the University of Colorado and taught classes in short-story writing. She likes to paint, camp in the Rockies and visit Indians in the Southwest. In addition to "Penny for Luck," she has written "A Bowlful of Stars," "Dusky Day," "Ranch and Ring" and "A Candle in the Mist."

This is called a "thumb test" because you are supposed to cover the answers below with your thumb while trying to guess them.

We pull out a hidden word puzzle first. Watch the letters in heavy type. "Mary will be a very good dancer," said her mother, as she does not lose her step or poise." See? An animal (beaver) and a fish (porpoise) were concealed there.

Vacations in Fall Berry, Berry Nice, Say Island Pupils

Vacation comes in the fall to some Hawaiian students. School is not two months old for them by now. When most boys and girls are well along in the school year, the schools in the coffee growing districts of the Hawaiian Islands close so the pupils can help harvest the crop.

The red berries must be picked from the trees immediately upon ripening. Recognizing the need for haste and knowing the youngsters are well paid for the easy work, officials close the schools during the coffee harvest.

The vacation period lasts from the last of August to the first of December. Students seem to like it, declaring its "berry" good.

STAMPS and THEIR STRANGE STORIES

The Stamp—Pegasus, the winged horse of Greek mythology which the ancients identified with the art of writing, is seen in a star-spangled sky on this stamp from Uruguay, symbolizing the rapid exchange of writing nowadays by air mail.

• • • •

The Place—Uruguay is the smallest of the South American republics with an area of only 72,150 square miles. For the most part, the country is a roll- ing, grassy plain with almost no wastelands or forests. Climate is both temperate and tropical. The nation has had a turbulent history, but is now one of the most stable and progressive of the South American republics.

• • • •

The People—Uruguay has a purer European population than any other South American country as the early settlers virtually exterminated the scattered groups of native Indians. Thus the present day population of 1,903,083 is 90 per cent white, 8 per cent mixed blood and 2 per cent Indian and Negro.

Most of the people prefer the free and open life of the cattle and sheep ranges to laborious tasks on the farm. As a result, farming is carried on only in the southern coastal area. Beef and mutton are the principal exports.

Fly Drowns Deathbed Groans of King Actor

A common house fly ruined a solemn deathbed scene for Henry the Eighth. Right into the studio room at the Gainsborough film lot, London, flew this fly as cameras were whirling. With a noise louder than a thousand Graf Zeppelins roaring above, Mr. Fly drowned out Henry's artistic death groans in the microphone, wasting five valuable moments and lord knows how many valuable feet of the movie, "Lady Jane Grey."

The MOUNTAIN LODGE MYSTERY

By DAVID WALES

Illustrated by Robert Pilgrim.

SYNOPSIS.

Tip and Connie Corbin and their married sister, Evelyn, are spending a week-end at the family's mountain lodge with Dave Masters and Madge Jones as their guests. In a raging blizzard a Mr. and Mrs. Cushman are stalled nearby and seek shelter at the lodge. Later the boys pull a young man unconscious from a wrecked car and bring him to the lodge. He turns out to be John Nelson, wanted for absconding with $50,000 in bonds from a bank where he is an employe. Mr. Wilton, caretaker of the lodge, discovers John Nelson is his son, John, who had left home several years ago after a fight with his other son, Enoch. An attempt is made to murder the injured John. Tip suspects Enoch, who is still "not quite right" in the head, after closely examining the snow tracks that form a triangle from a nearby path to John's window and then to the window of the Cushmans' room. Later Tip finds Mr. Cushman and Enoch fighting. Enoch is knocked out but Tip questions him to verify Mr. Cushman's story that he was fighting to keep Enoch from crawling into John's room. Enoch tells Tip that it was Mr. Cushman who was trying to crawl into John's room. Tip begins to suspect that Mr. Cushman, for some undiscovered reason, is trying to kill John Nelson. He realizes that Mr. Cushman could have made the first attack and arranged the triangular snow tracks to throw suspicion on Enoch. At daybreak next morning, Tip awakens to find Mr. Cushman stealing his car. Jumping on the running board, Tip is knocked to the ground.

Last Installment.

DAZED for only a moment by his fall, Tip scrambled to his feet and dashed after the car. It was already 50 feet away, turning from the drive into the lane that led to the road.

But Mr. Cushman was giving the car plenty of power, and although the going was heavy in the deep snow, he rapidly pulled away from Tip. The car neared the road, and Tip was ready to quit in dispair, when suddenly he uttered a cry. An automobile, painted the familiar red of the State police cars, had turned into the lane from the road, and was blocking Cushman's escape

"Stop him! Don't let him out!" Tip shouted the warning at the top of his voice as he floundered along the lane. He saw a State policeman jump from the car, followed by a tall, broad-shouldered young man whom Tip recognized instantly.

"Doug!" he cried. "Don't let that man get away! He's stealing our car!"

By the time Tip reached the group at the end of the lane, Doug Layton, Evelyn's husband, was holding Mr. Cushman firmly by the arm, and the two State officers were standing, one on either side, with grim faces.

• • • •

"TIP!" cried Doug. "What's happening? What's it all about?"

Tip breathlessly explained the situation. "These people are Mr. and Mrs. Cushman," he blurted. "They've been stranded here since Friday night. They've been wanting to get away, and I woke up a while ago and found them taking our car. When I tried to stop them he pushed me off the running board."

Doug glared menacingly at Mr. Cushman, while Mrs. Cushman sat, white-faced and silent, in the car. Tip noticed that she still clutched her little black bag tightly in her lap. Mr. Cushman tried to shake himself loose from Doug, and smiled blandly at the officers.

"I suppose it wasn't the right thing to do," he explained with apparent frankness. "But you see, my wife and I had simply had all we could stand. We've been shut up there since Friday night, with a murderer loose somewhere. We decided to leave this morning, but of course we intended to send the car back as soon as we could get another."

At the word "murderer," Doug's face had paled. "What is he talking about, Tip?" he demanded. "What has happened? Are Evelyn and Connie all right?"

As briefly as possible, Tip related the events of the last two days. Doug's eyes were wide as he listened.

• • • •

"I'VE been trying to get through ever since yesterday morning," he explained. "But my car bogged down last night. I finally came on with Sergt. Skelly. It has taken us four hours to get up this road from the highway. We were stuck a dozen times."

One of the officers now spoke up. "Suppose we go back to the house," he suggested. "I want to see this young John Nelson, or John Wilton. He's the man we're after, all right." The officer, who Tip soon learned was Sergt. Skelly, then turned to the Cushmans. "You come along with us. I'm not ready to let you go just yet—and you'd never get over that road, anyway."

Back at the lodge, Tip saw Mr. and Mrs. Cushman go to the closet off the living room and hang up their coats. Then he roused Dave and ran upstairs to awaken the girls.

They dressed in record time, dashed downstairs to bury Doug under a tumultuous welcome, and then hurried to the kitchen to prepare breakfast. While waiting for the meal, Sergt. Skelly questioned Mr. Cushman closely. The man told a plausible story which added little to what they already knew about him. Then Tip, assisted by the others, described everything that had happened since their arrival at the lodge.

• • • •

"WELL see about this Enoch Wilson a little later," said Sergt. Skelly, grimly. "My first job is to make sure of John Nelson. As soon as we've eaten I'll have a talk with him."

The meal over, Sergt. Skelly went into John Wilton's room alone.

In less than a minute the door opened again. Sergt. Skelly beckoned sternly to Mr. Cushman. "Come here," he demanded.

• • • •

TIP saw the man's face blanch, but he got up and crossed the room. Immediately Mrs. Cushman jumped to her feet and followed. The other officer ran after her, and the others, unable to restrain their curiosity, also hurried to the door of the bedroom. They clustered there in a tight little group while Sergt. Skelly marched Mr. Cushman to the bedside of John Wilton.

The young man looked sick and pale, but obviously in his right mind again, he struggled to sit up in bed. He fell back again, pointing with shaking finger at Mr. Cushman.

"That's the man!" he cried in a trembling voice. "That's the man that took the bonds. His name may be Cushman now, but it was Connors when I saw him last."

Mr. Cushman's face was a mask. "The man's delirious," he said shortly. "I never saw him before in my life."

"Smell Them," Connie Commanded, Shoving the Bonds Back at Sergeant Skelly.

John Wilton uttered a gasp of despair. "I tell you he is the man!" he cried. "Nobody will believe me, and it's mostly my fault, anyway, but I didn't steal those bonds. He took them and I was trying to get them back."

• • • •

THEN, in a halting voice, John Wilton told his wide-eyed audience an extraordinary story. He described how he had been working hard and saving his money so that his brother, Enoch, might have an operation by a skilled surgeon, in the hope that the head injury might be remedied. He gave a vivid picture of the remorse he felt because he had been responsible for Enoch's present condition.

He had met Mr. Cushman—or Mr. Connors—several weeks before. The man had posed as a broker on vacation from New York. John had taken him at his word and when the man suggested an investment that would return a large and quick profit, he had followed his advice.

The investment had proved every bit as good as Mr. Cushman had prophesied, and John had made enough money to assure Enoch's operation. Naturally, he had been very grateful to Mr. Cushman.

"I should have realized that he was just baiting the trap," the young man in the bed continued, tossing restlessly as he told his story. "But I didn't. I trusted him absolutely, after that.

"Then a few days ago he came to the bank when I was working late. One of the officers was sick and I was taking care of his work. This man had told me that he owned a number of bonds of the same issue the bank owned, but his were on safe deposit in New York. He wanted to look up some provision printed on the face of the bonds, and asked to see the ones in our vaults.

"I shouldn't have let him see the bonds, but I did. I was with him all the time, and I don't know how he worked the trick. But after he had gone, I began to feel uneasy, and I examined the bonds. Fifty thousand dollars' worth of them were gone, and in their place was worthless paper!

• • • •

"I KNEW I'd lose my job for my carelessness if the loss were discovered, so I decided I'd have to get the bonds back. I went to the hotel in Bryanville, where he was staying, and found he and his wife had left. I traced them out Route 27 and figured they would cut across the mountain to Route 211. Then the snow got bad and I guess I wrecked my car. That's all I remember."

As he finished the recital, John Wilton sank back weakly on his pillow. For a moment nobody spoke. Then Sergt. Skelly looked grimly at Mr. Cushman.

"Well," he barked, "what have you got to say to that?"

Tip, in the doorway, was watching the man closely. Mr. Cushman's eyes were hard, but he smiled. "It's obviously the wild story of a man who is delirious, or the desperate attempt of a crook to shift the blame to somebody else," he said, scornfully. "I tell you, I never saw this man before in my life. He can't prove a word of what he has said."

• • • •

JOHN WILTON uttered a cry, but Sergt. Skelly held up his hand. "If his story is true," he said to Mr. Cushman, "you must have the bonds. I'm going to search you."

Mr. Cushman was still smiling. "You're welcome to search me," he retorted. "But why don't you search this young man first. He probably had the bonds with him when he absconded."

"We've already searched his car," Tip put in eagerly. "They weren't there. And he was unconscious when we carried him in here."

"But how about his clothing?" demanded Mr. Cushman. "Did you search that?"

"We took everything out of the pockets when we put him to bed," Evelyn answered.

Sergt. Skelly spoke again. "Better let me have a look," he said.

• • • •

WHILE the others watched eagerly, the officer went over John Wilton's clothing. He found nothing.

"How about his overcoat?" he inquired. Tip led the way to the closet off the living room. The officer turned out the pockets, and was about to hang up the coat again when he suddenly uttered an exclamation.

"There's something here!" he cried. "Something bulky in the lining. And here's a slit that has been cut by a knife!"

• • • •

SERGT. SKELLY reached into the slit and brought out a heavy manila envelope. Quickly he opened it.

"The missing bonds!" he gasped. Then he shook his head sadly. "And I was almost believing that young fellow's story."

Tip had watched the discovery of the bonds with bewilderment. Slowly he followed the officer back to the room. Sergt. Skelly held up the elaborately engraved certificates in one hand.

"I found them in Wilton's overcoat," he said briefly to Mr. Cushman. "I guess that clears you. Sorry."

John Wilton uttered a bewildered cry, and tried to rise from the bed, but the officer stepped over and pushed him back. Then Tip suddenly heard Connie gasp. When he looked at her, she had raised her head, and was sniffing the air eagerly.

"Wait!" she cried. "Let me smell those bonds!"

She reached forward and jerked the certificates from the hand of the bewildered officer. Placing them against her nose, she inhaled deeply.

"Smell them!" she commanded, shoving them back at Sergt. Skelly. "Then wait a minute!"

Connie went throught the amazed group at the door like a fullback plunging for a touchdown. In a few seconds she was back, carrying the black handbag that Mrs. Cushman had kept so close to her ever since her arrival at the lodge. Connie threw it open on the bed, and immediately an overpowering wave of perfume assailed the nostrils of everyone in the room.

• • • •

"IF those bonds were in Mr. Wilton's overcoat all the time," Connie demanded, her eyes shining, "how does it happen that they smell just like Mrs. Cushman, and Mrs. Cushman's overnight case? I'd know that perfume anywhere! She carried a bottle in this bag, and it has been spilled. Some of it spilled on the bonds—you can smell it as plain as day!"

Tip uttered a delighted yell. "Connie's right! Those bonds must have been in that bag. Mrs. Cushman just got rid of them when they hung up their coats in the closet a few minutes ago. With the police here, they knew they couldn't get away with the bonds, so they planted them in John Wilton's overcoat!"

Sergt. Skelly looked grimly at Mr. Cushman. "With a half dozen people here who will back me up in testifying about that smell," he said, "I think we can put you away for a while. Mister, suppose you and your wife get ready to take a ride down to Bryanville with me. I'll have an ambulance pick this young man up later."

• • • •

IT WAS almost three months before Tip and Connie spent another week-end at the lodge. And the first thing they did upon their arrival was to go to the Wilton farmhouse to see Enoch, who was rapidly recovering from the effects of a delicate head operation.

"He's as sane as you are!" cried Connie after they had left him. "Of course, maybe that's not saying much."

"Maybe not,' retorted Tip. "But I was sane enough to be suspicious of that Mr. Cushman all the time."

"Yes," cried Connie, "but it took me to prove he was a crook!"

"Yeah, I'll have to give you credit for that," Tip acknowledged. "And because of that long nose of yours, John Wilton is back at work in the bank, and Mr. Cushman is in jail. He ought to be there on a charge of attempted murder, instead of just larceny, or whatever it was. I feel positive he tried to get in that window and kill John."

"So do I," agreed Connie. "But the trouble was, he didn't leave any perfume behind so I could solve that little mystery for you!"

(The End.)

In English-speaking countries it is estimated at 3 miles. The word is usually used indefinitely or poetically, however—as in the phrase "seven-league boots," for example. (3) A fathom is 6 feet. Postman Goes Through by Dog Sled

Hauls Sacks 12 Miles When Winter Grips Maine Woodland.

When winter grips the great Maine woods and the drifts are high and the temperatures low, the mailman still goes through—by dog sled.

Seven Baffin Land huskies hitched to a wooden sled not unlike those used by Northern prospectors and trappers daily drag Postman Fred B. Fowler and his cargo of letters over the lonely 12½-mile distance known as "Star Route 1291."

Mercury Hits 40 Below.

The route extends from Oquossoc toward the villages of Grants and Kennebago, near the Canadian border in the northwest section of Maine.

"The villages are situated on the shores of Kennebago Lake," writes Mr. Fowler, "high in a mountain and forest fastness not yet penetrated by a graded road.

"Formerly the communities were serviced by a branch line of the Maine Central Railroad, but last winter the branch line was abandoned.

"In summer an auto bus runs on the old rails, but in winter it's a different story. Right now temperatures are running from 10 to 40 below, and snowdrifts from 8 and 10 feet deep, and I can only get through only with dog sled.

Animals Along Route.

"My huskies—Mitzu, Kaskasin, Whiskey, Cholo, Jibwa, Cheeluk and Mishka—have never failed to get through. Although the mail varies from 200 to 500 pounds, our running time has never been slower than 4 hours and 15 minutes, and has been speeded up to 1 hour and 19 minutes.

"Deer, bear, bob-cats and foxes often scurry before the oncoming dogs. Recently I bagged a large bob-cat."

Postman Fowler is a man of the woods. He has driven dogs in the Hudson Bay country, the woods of Quebec, New Brunswick and Maine. In these sections he has guided hunting and fishing parties most of his life. During the summer he runs a sporting goods store at Oquossoc. And during the winter he adds another chapter to the already colorful history of the United States mail in its advancement from stage coach and pony express to the China Clipper.

Leonard Dauenhauer Wins Again.

Runner Is Regular Winner, Sets World Mark in One Event

Leonard Dauenhauer, of Syracuse, N. Y., Central High School, has crossed the finish line as victor more than seven times in cross-country races during the past four years and has broken one world record.

His latest victory was in the Manhattan, N. Y., College's thirteenth annual cross-country run against a field of 400.

Wins Sectional Run.

Leonard started track at Syracuse Central High in the spring of 1932, winning the mile run in the New York State sectional meet.

In the spring of 1933 he again won the mile run in several meets and changing into an 880-yard dash man in 1934, continued his victories in that event.

In the fall of that year, Leonard again competed in cross-country races and placed first in the 2.5-mile run three times against 150 to 350 runners. Then, on Thanksgiving Day, he set a new world record in the Nationals at Newark, N. J., for 2.5 miles.

Brother Runs, Too.

Leonard's running hasn't been all roses, however. "I take as many defeats as I do victories," he writes, "but always figure that the best man wins."

His brother, Ernest, who attends the same school, is also a cross-country runner, and came out third in the Manhattan meet last fall.

Marble-ous.

The boys playing marbles in front of Steve's house were making too much noise so Mother sent him

"I only had three marbles to start with!"

Henry: The towel!

Butter Not Said.

Paul: Aw, Ma, you didn't put enough butter and jam on this bread.

Mother: All right, put part of the bread back.

Cross-Country Runs.

Teacher (speaking of elections all over the world): And what do candidates in South America run for?

Pupil: The border!

He's Not Afraid.

Boss: Late again. Haven't you got an alarm clock?

Office boy: Sure, but it doesn't alarm me any more.

Self-Defense.

Father (about to use the strap): This is going to hurt me more than it will you.

Son: Well, dad, don't be too hard on yourself.

The Sacrifice.

Father: Your school life is costing too much money. You'll have to cut down on your expenses.

Son (in high school): That's all right, I can do without books.

Lady: Here, here, you shouldn't hit that boy when he's down!

Bully: Naw? What d'ye think I got 'im down for?

Getting Hot.

Jane: I like school, mother. Already I have the best seat in the room.

Mother: Where is it; next to the teacher?

Jane: No; next to the radiator!

Drumming Up Trade.

Lady: No, I'm afraid to buy my son musical instruments, even if he does like them. Why the other day he tried to swallow his fife.

Salesman: Well, how about a nice bass drum?

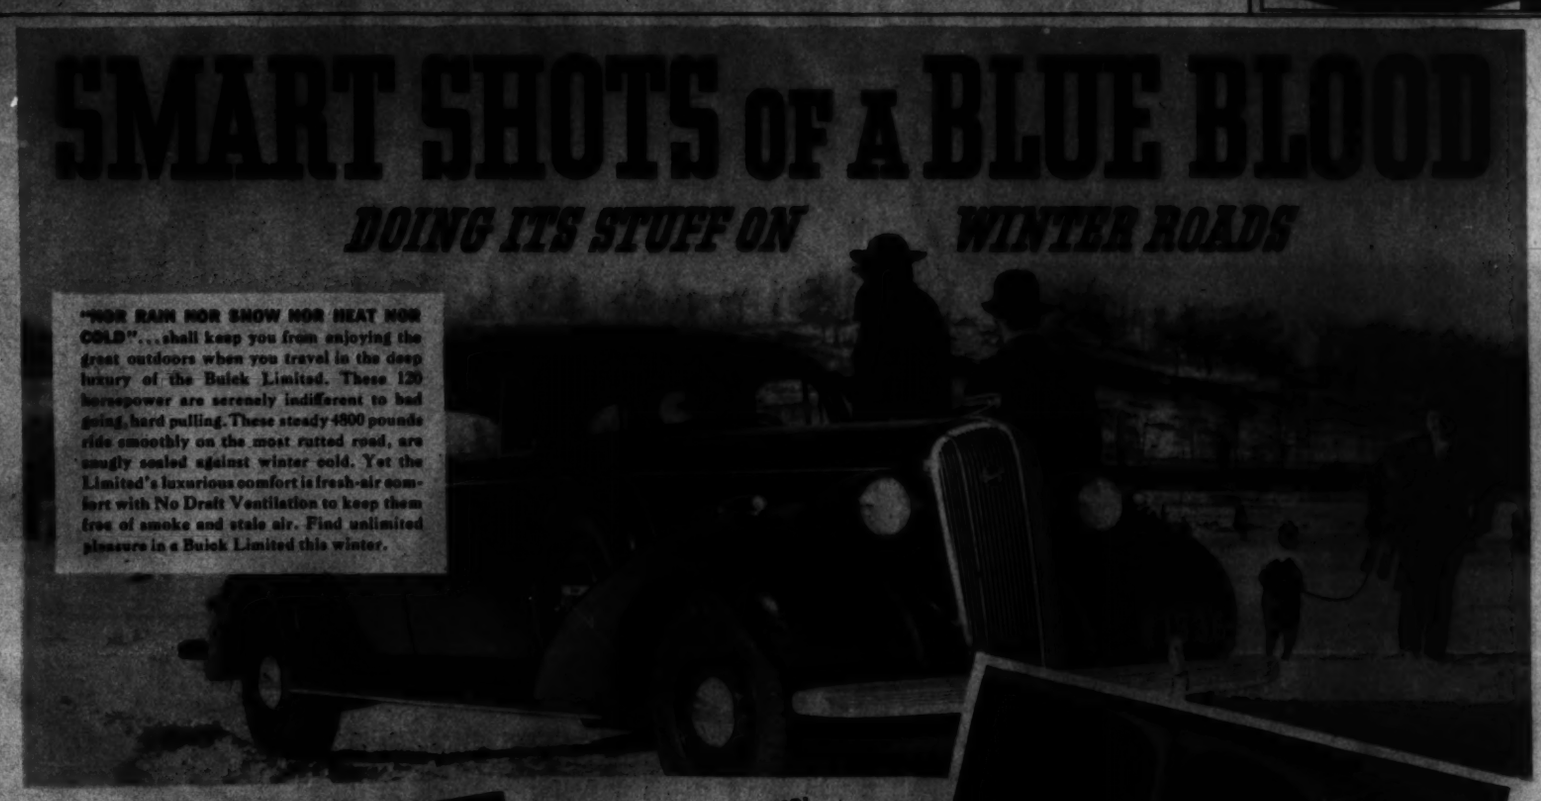
SMART SHOTS OF A BLUE BLOOD

DOING ITS STUFF ON WINTER ROADS



"NOR RAIN NOR SNOW NOR HEAT NOR COLD"... shall keep you from enjoying the great outdoors when you travel in the deep luxury of the Buick Limited. These 120 horsepower are serenely indifferent to bad going, hard pulling. These steady 4800 pounds ride smoothly on the most rutted road, are snugly sealed against winter cold. Yet the Limited's luxurious comfort is fresh-air comfort with No Draft Ventilation to keep them free of smoke and stale air. Find unlimited pleasure in a Buick Limited this winter.

A TOE-TOUCH—AND YOU STOP! Ease of every woman driver this time of year is the skid. But here's one of the skid is Buick's perfected hydraulic brakes. A toe-touch puts them in action. Cast iron shoes in cast iron drums machined to hair-line accuracy, give equal and perfect grip on all four wheels at all times. No slewing or swerving, no loss of braking power with wear. This winter you'll thank yourself a thousand times for choosing a Buick—just because of its silk-smooth, steel-sure, tiptoe action brakes.

WHILE THE MILES MURMUR BY, back seat passengers luxuriate in four-dimensioned delight. There's leg room and head room and elbow comfort to spare. The fourth dimension? It speaks for itself—did you ever see a car interior more truly smart, more completely satisfying in the perfect rightness of every detail?

THE YOUNGER GENERATION KNOWS IT — "Buick's the buy!" No engine is smoother or freer from roughness than this matchless oil-silenced valve-in-head straight-eight. No ride can match Buick's glider-smooth flight—no car is more satisfyingly modern in trim cleanness. There are four Buicks, beginning in price at $765 list, at the factory,* and the majestic Limited is monarch of them all. If you have money to put in a new car this spring, no place will it buy more in safety and comfort and style and satisfaction than in Buick.

HOME TO SEE THE FOLKS. Winter roads are smooth, winter trips are fun, when the lordly Limited provides the transportation. And if you have wondered about buying a car at this time of year, just remember—low temperatures and short trips provide the best possible conditions for breaking in a car. Would you like to sample the winter pleasures a Buick opens up? Phone your dealer for a demonstration.

THIS NOSE KNOWS the way to the smartest resorts, the finest hotels, the most lordly manor houses. For Buick fits the picture wherever style and smartness and good taste are the subject matter. Streamlining comes of age in Buick in this arrowing front end which is as aerodynamically right as it is naturally modern in concept.

"Buick's the Buy"

THRILLING TO OWN . . . EASY TO BUY! The Buick Limited, with 120 horsepower and 138-inch wheelbase, lists at the factory at $1695, to $1945. Such luxury and power, such smoothness and ease, were never before put on four wheels at such a figure. The new GMAC 6% Time Payment Plan reduces the cost of time payment buying. Why not use these savings to give yourself a car that fits your heart's desire? All Buick prices include safety glass and built-in luggage compartments. Standard and special accessories groups extra. Prices subject to change without notice. Other Buicks list at the factory as low as $765

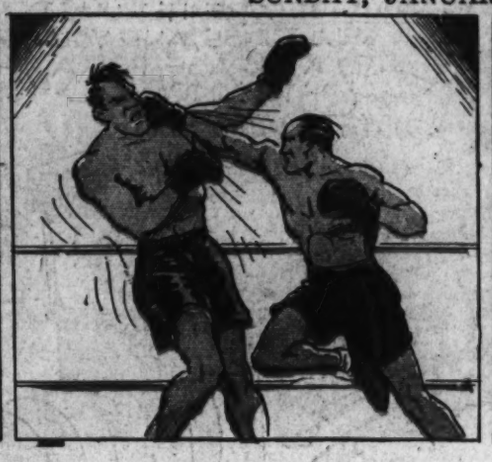
FISHER'S HISTORY OF BOXING

1-19.

SHARKEY EASILY WON FROM PRIMO CARNERA. IN THEIR FIRST FIGHT. ONCE HE DROPPED "PREHENSILE PREEM" AND THEN TRIED TO LEAP OUT OF THE RING IN A FIT OF TEMPERAMENT BECAUSE OF THE REFEREE'S MISTAKE.



HE WAS ROUNDLY BOOED, BUT HE WAS IN THE RIGHT. THE COUNT WAS STARTED AND CARNERA GOT OFF HIS KNEES TO RESUME FIGHTING, CHANGED HIS MIND AND DROPPED AGAIN. THE REFEREE CONTINUED THE COUNT. JACK WAS RESTRAINED AND THE FIGHT RESUMED. SHARKEY HANDLED CARNERA REMARKABLY EASY.
